

Samuel Long Esq.

Division

R L

Section

SCR 10869
v. 4

Library of the Theological Seminary.

PRINCETON, N. J.

Collection of Puritan Literature.

Division

Section

Number

THE JEWISH SPY:

BEING A

PHILOSOPHICAL, HISTORICAL and CRITICAL Correspondence,

By LETTERS

Which lately pass'd between certain JEWS in Turkey, Italy, France, Spain, &c.

Translated from the ORIGINALS into French,

Jean Baptiste de Boyer
By the MARQUIS D'ARGENS;
And now done into English.

V O L. IV.

L O N D O N:

Printed for D. BROWNE, at the Black Swan without Temple-Bar; and R. HERR, at the Bible and Crown in the Poultry.

M. DCC. XL.

W.

Assurance which I earnestly implore them; and in the just Confidence I have of obtaining from you this Favor, I remain with the profoundest Respect,

Yours &c.

Long with Friends, and

Obdient Servant,

M. D.

W. D. D. W.

Printed for D. B. Brown at the Book Store and H. Hart at the Bible and Tracts Office in New York

MDCCCXL

DEDICATION. v

tice refuse the Lettres Juives that generous Assistance which I earnestly implore for them; and in the just Confidence I have of obtaining from you this Favour, I remain with the profoundest Respect,

INCOMPARABLE KNIGHT,

Your most Humble, and most

Obedient Servant,

M. D.

P R E F A C E.

JUST as I had finished this fourth Volume, I received from Amsterdam the twenty-third Tome of the Bibliothèque Francoise; in which I found a Letter, wherein, under colour of setting forth the State of the Sciences in Spain, there is a warm Declamation against a certain Work, not mention'd indeed, but so plainly describ'd, that one may easily see it means the Jewish Letters.

I resolved at first to make no answer to this Critique, the Author of which passes in the Eye of the World, as well as in the Republick of Letters, for a kind of Madman, and a perfect Copy of the famous Don Quixote. In reality, 'tis well known, he is as romantically fond of the Spanish Nation as the Hero of La Mancha was of his incomparable Dulcinea. I did not therefore look upon myself as obliged to take notice of the Objections of such a Person; and I should have held my first Resolution if I had not afterwards reflected, that this impertinent Letter being inserted in a Journal, wherein we sometimes meet with useful and curious Pieces, many Readers might be persuaded the Criticism came from the Journalists themselves. I will therefore just point out

TO THE

Valiant and Magnanimous

Don QUIXOTE

De la MANCHA,

Invincible Knight of the LIONS,

&c. &c. &c.

Illustrious Hero of Cervantes, not to be parallell'd for the Destruction of Sheep and Puppets, courageous and intrepid Assailant of Wind-Mills and Fulling-Mills, perpetual Terror of the Catchpoles of the Holy Brotherhood *, &c. &c. permit me to put under your powerful Protection this Fourth

* La Santa Hermandad, as it is called in the Original, is a Brotherhood of long standing in Spain; where it was first instituted in a Time of very great Confusion, to suppress Robbers: by which means 'tis safe travelling in this Country, the Fraternity being spread all over the Kingdom. Their Beadles or Serjeants to apprehend such Offenders are called Alguazils.

iv DEDICATION.

Volume of the Lettres Juives. A certain crack-brain'd Knight, to the full as mad and as extravagant as yourself, hath resolv'd upon their Ruin, and vow'd their Destruction. In vain does the Public think to save them from his Fury. He offers battle to the whole Universe, and boasts that he will reduce them to atoms, maugre the Protection of all Enchanters. In this extreme Distress permit me to fly to you for Succour; come, O wrong-headed Knight, oppose Folly to Folly: humble your Rival, the insolent Knight of Iberia; and after laying him flat on the Ground, compel him to confess that he has no Title to the Privilege of being so extravagant as you. Considering how long he has pretended to vye with you for the Scepter or Bawble of Momus, your Jealousy might justly be inflam'd at his Impertinence and Folly; yet you still suffer him to enjoy his Reputation in Peace. But consider that Glory calls you forth to Battle, and that even your Profession demands you should exert yourself. You are bound by the Laws of Knight-Errantry to redress Grievances, to comfort the Afflicted, and to protect the Oppressed. You cannot therefore in Justice out a few of the many Blunders in that ridiculous Piece.

This Knight of Iberia undertakes at once the Defence of all the Authors who have been criticized in the Jewish Letters. He ought to be pardon'd for resenting the Affront put upon them, because a good part of it falls to his own Share; and he appeals to the Publick against the Injustice which he imagines to have been done to him. He treats as Blockheads, says he, Men of Learning, who have put it in the power of the Publick to judge of their Erudition. To this I answer, that there can be nothing so false; and I defy him to name an Author, worthy of Esteem, whom I have not commended. Des Cartes, Gassendi, Bernier, Mallebranche, Bayle, Locke, s' Gravesande, Vitriarius, Boerhaave, De Thou, Daniel, Pascal, Sirmond, Petau, Lamy: in short, all the Learned, of whatever Country, whatsoever Condition, or whatever Religion they are of, Catholics or Protestants, Jesuits or Jansenists, they were all one to me. Wherever I discover'd Merit, I have not scrupled to own it. I have been equally just to the Authors of Works relating to Poetry and Romances: I have commended Corneille, Racine, Milton, Pope, Petrarch, Tasso, Guarini, Don Lopez de Vega, Cervantes, Crebillon, Voltaire, Rousseau. It is true, that even at the time I allow'd the last to have Wit, I denied him somewhat else, which I thought I both might and ought to do, since it was taken from him by a solemn Arret of the first Parliament of France. Those I have mention'd are all good Authors; and for their Works I shall ever have the highest Esteem. Where then are the Writers I have treated as Blockheads! who had nevertheless given the Publick an opportunity of judging of their Erudition? I fancy the Critick had a mind to point out himself. But how entred it into his Brain that his copying three Pages from Moreri's Dictionary, and three more from the Dictionary of Corneille, and connecting them with Scraps from other Books, and with his Pillage from Baudrand, whose Dictionary he has almost robb'd of every Word; how could he think, I say, that this would give him the Title and Character of a Man of Learning? I proceed to other Complaints:

It is astonishing, says this Critick, that a Person of Birth, Education, Wit, Fortune, and honourable Employments, should quit all, and take up the mean Employment of an Author.

These Praises bestow'd upon me are only Garlands to adorn the Victim; and I am raised to this height purely to be tumbled down from it. Before I leave this Article I must and will say it, that tho' it were true, that Fortune had placed me in a splendid Condition, there is nothing shameful in my quitting it, in order to abandon myself entirely to Philosophy, and to enjoy that sweet Satisfaction which results from the Cultivation of the Sciences. Were the Works of Rocheffoucault, Montaigne, Malherbe, Racan, or Bussi Rabutin ever objected to them as a Crime? The famous Cardinal Richelieu was as zealous for having the Reputation of an Author as he was for the Destruction of Spain. This Critick, no doubt, despises the Cardinal, and thinks him much to blame. But to proceed to his Reproaches.

to

He ranges me in the Class of those Libertine Writers who set Pen to Paper for no other end but to run down Religion, Virtue, Knowledge, and Merit. As to Virtue and Religion, I have in the Prefaces to the first and second Volumes of this Work made it clearly enough appear, that none but a perfect Slanderer could be guilty of such Language: And as to the small Respect he says I have shewn towards the truly Learned, I have just explain'd my self on that head. If, indeed, the Critick is really a learned Man, then I own I have done wrong to condemn his Works; but this is a Point which I leave to the Decision of the Publick.

As this Censurer hath not thought proper to enter into any Detail, but only runs out into general Invectives against me, while he commends excessively a number of miserable Authors, it's impossible I should answer him as to the Faults he may find in this Book. Before

I conclude this Preface, therefore, I will examine some of the Praise of which he has been so lavish on the Spanish Writers; and I shall evidently demonstrate, that they are a hundred times more hurt by his Compliments than they could have been by the most abusive Criticism. One may well apply to him, in this Case, the fine Passage in Tacitus: Pessimum Inimicorum Genus Laudantes.

Our Critick begins by establishing the Goodness, Beauty, and Delicacy of the Spanish Genius on the Works of St. Teresa, Lewis of Granada, and the Reverend Father Rodriguez; and he even proceeds to insult me by questioning whether I know those Books: I dare say, they are as well known to me as to him, tho' I value them much less; especially Rodriguez, of whose writing I have read some very bad Books, very meanly translated, and so generally contemn'd, that Moliere was not afraid to ridicule them in one of his Pieces. I am astonish'd the Critick did not know this Line:

She read Rodriguez, and us'd mental Prayer.

Perhaps 'twas a wilful Forgetfulness; for as to Theatrical Matters, they are to be sure within the Sphere of his Knowledge.

I come next to the Dramatick Poets, whom this Critick has commended in a manner so ridiculous, that if he had intended it, he could not

not have fatiriz'd them more severely. These are his own Words: The Spanish Dramatick Authors have been long the Magazines whence our Authors have supplied themselves. Scarron and Montfleuri are Instances. Can any thing be said so much to the Disgrace of the Spanish Poets as to make them the Inventors of the vilest Farces, and to give them for Disciples and Imitators the worst and most despicable of our Writers? What Notion should we have of certain Poets if we were told that Pradon form'd his Taste by perusing their Books? should we not have reason to regard them as the very Sink of the Republick of Letters? It must be confess'd the Critick has but bad Talents for commending. Defend me, Heaven, from such a Panegyrist! I even prefer his Hatred to his Friendship. In order to shew him the Difference between the Praises I have bestow'd on some valuable Spanish Writers and the sad stuff he writes about them, I shall here report what I have said of Don Lopez de Vega in my 118th Letter: That Author hath written Comedies so excellent, that the great Corneille assures us, that he would have given two of his best Tragedies to have been the Inventor of the Lyar. Thou knowest it was upon the Plan of this Spanish Play the French Poet compos'd his. I leave it now to be decided, whether the Critic or I aim'd to affront the Spanish Nation. But I shall be still still in a better way to obtain a favourable Verdict, when the Reader sees the Parallel of what we have both said of the Spanish Historians:

The Critic contents himself with mentioning The History of Arragon by Zurita, and The General History of Spain by Mariana. By an unaccountable stroke of Folly, of two Authors mention'd by him, there is one who ought to be abhorr'd by all good Men: not but that the History of Mariana is a good Book; but he compos'd another*, which the Parliament of Paris condemn'd to the Flames, and which the Jesuits themselves have disavow'd. In this Work he has insinuated, that it is not only lawful, but laudable to put to death an heretical or a tyrannical King: He praises, even to excess, the execrable Monk who murder'd Henry the Third, and is not ashamed to call him the Honour and Glory of France. It must be acknowledg'd, that since the Critic resolv'd to quote but two Authors, he ought to have avoided making Mariana one of them, or else he should have follow'd my Example, and mention'd several others at the same time. I shall transcribe from my 118th Letter the Names of some, in the order they are therein commended: Antonio de Solis, Sandoval, Antonio de Herrera, Don Bartholomew de las Casas. Nor have

I.

* De Rege & Regis Institutione.

Iforgot to praise such Poets and Romance Writers as are worthy the Esteem of Readers of Judgment: As Michael de Cervantes, Matthew Alcan, Don Alonzo de Hercilla, John Rufo, Christopher de Virves, &c. It may easily be determin'd from the number of those Authors, whether it was my Design to sink the Reputation of one Nation, in order to raise that of another. It is true, I did maintain, and do still, that the Spaniards have not one Philosopher amongst them; and that none they can have by reason of the Inquisition. And is not this a Truth of which the whole World is convinced? The Critic indeed will not allow it. Like a magnanimous and unconquerable Knight he is determin'd to stand to his Opinion right or wrong: An exact and worthy Copy of the Hero of Cervantes, with whom there is no living on good Terms, if one does not purely and simply confess, that the very faults of his charming Dulcinea are superior to the Virtues of the greatest Princesses.

In order to give the greater weight to his Opinion, the Critic calls in the Authority of Father Rapin, who, in his Reflections on Philosophy, says the Spaniards excel in Metaphysics. But that Author's Blunder is no excuse at all for the Critic's: For example, the Commendation given by this Jesuit to the Physics and Logic of Aristotle is sufficient to shew whether

whether his Opinion ought to be look'd on as decisive in matters of Philosophy *. *There appear'd nothing, says he, that was fix'd and regular, either in Logic or true Philosophy, before Aristotle. This Genius, so very rational and intelligent, enter'd so deep into the Abyss of human Understanding, that he penetrated to its most secret Recesses, by the accurate Distinctions he made as to its Operations. Before him they had never sounded this vast Ocean of the human Thoughts in order to judge of its Depth. Aristotle was the first who discover'd this new way, in order to attain to Science by the Evidence of Demonstration, and to proceed to Demonstration geometrically by the Mode of Syllogism, the most accomplish'd Work, the greatest Effort of the human Mind. To shew the Impertinence and Ridicule of this Elogium, and also what sort of Books those are which passed with Father Rapin for Master-Pieces in Philosophy, I shall only cite a Passage from Des Cartes, another from Mallebranche, and a third from Locke. Whoever would be more fully convinced of the Nonsense of the Writings of this Grecian Sage need only consult the illustrious Gassendi in his Exercitationes Paradoxicæ adversus Aristotelicos.*

I

* Rapin, Reflexions sur la Logique, Num. iv. p. 373.
374.

Spanish Ministry; but the Storms to which all Courts are liable, have removed them from their Places. The Man that is most cried up here is Cardinal Alberoni: not only the Strangers, who are here in great numbers, but also many Spaniards do justice to that able Minister. . . . Since the Accession of Philip V. Spain hath overcome half the Evils which were brought upon her by such as were intrusted with the Administration of Affairs under Philip IV. and Charles II. Her Troops are numerous, brave, and well disciplin'd. There's a fourth Part more People in the Country than there was, by means of the great numbers of French and Flemings who are settled there; and this Crown, which for one while was perfectly despised, makes as good a figure now, as it did formerly.

I think I have now said enough to shew the Folly, the Ignorance, and Knavery of this pretended Iberian Knight; for I shall not reply to his Invectives, and to those gross Reflections which he has thrown out against me in the close of his Epistle. God forbid that I should ever introduce the Language of Fish-stalls upon Parnassus: It is the Mind alone, and not the Body, which is a Member of the Republick of Letters. Were it not for this, how often should we be confounded to know in what Rank some People ought to be placed?

Where,

xviii P R E F A C E.

Where, for Example, should we bestow a Man, who, after being in his Youth a Rope-Dancer, a Tumbler, a Player, in his Old-age married two Dressers of the Actresses one after another, and last of all, a Turkey-Driver that was reduced to serve in an Alehouse; and, which is still meaner, to be his own Servant? Sure I am, that the Critic must allow if this individual Person was a Member of the Republick of Letters, it would be very difficult to find such an Original a proper Station.

Before I conclude this Preface, I shall say a word or two of some Translations made of the Jewish Letters: I am told there is a Dutch Translation which will quickly appear, the MS. being actually in the Hands of a Book-seller *. I have not seen it; and if I should see it, I am no judge of it, since I understand not the Language: But one, who is a Master of it, says, that it is extremely well done, which is all I know of the matter, having not the least Acquaintance with its Author. I am inform'd also from Germany, that the two first Volumes of the Lettres Juives are translated into High Dutch.

But

* 'Tis just now printed at the Hague, and dedicated to me: I am very glad of this Opportunity of expressing my Gratitude for this piece of Civility; and the just Sense I have of the Honour done me, in communicating my Letters to a Nation for whom I have an infinite Esteem.

I begin with transcribing the Opinion of Mallebranche * : Aristotle seldom reason'd on any other than the confused Ideas we receive by the Senses, and other vague, general, and indeterminate Notions, which convey'd nothing particular to the Understanding. The Terms made use of commonly by this Philosopher served only to express confusedly to the Senses and the Imagination, the indiscriminate Notions he had of sensible Things, or else were contrived to make up so loose and indeterminate a Discourse as expressed nothing distinctly.

Let me next introduce Des Cartes † : The Logic of the Schools is properly speaking nothing more than a Dialectic; which teaches us a Method of imparting to others what we know, or even of putting a Parcel of Words together without Judgment upon Things we know not; consequently it corrupts Good Sense rather than augments it.

I close my Confutation of Father Rapin with a Passage from Mr. Locke || : We reason, says he, much better, and with more Perspicuity when we observe only the Connection of Proofs, without methodizing our Thoughts, or forming them into Syllogisms. . . . God hath not been so sparing of his Favours to Mankind,

* Mallebranche, Recherche de la Verité, Liv.v. cap.ii. p. 388.

† Des Cartes, Principes de la Philosophie, Preface.

|| Essay on Human Understanding, Book iv. ch. xvii.

Mankind, as only to make us two-legged Creatures, and leave to Aristotle the Care of making us reasonable Beings.

One sees by this how little the Authority of Father Rapin is to be relied upon, especially in respect to Philosophers; and in as much as he is profuse in his Praises of Aristotle, one need not be very much surpris'd at the Praise he bestows on the Spanish Metaphysicians. It is but a natural Consequence of his way of thinking, all those Metaphysicians being zealous Followers of Aristotle. But to shew either the Ignorance or Knavery of our Critick, if there be so many excellent Philosophers and Metaphysicians in Spain, why did he not name some of them? This he could not possibly do, or at least not without making himself still more ridiculous than he justly was before.

To finish the Answer I have condescended to give to his Objections, I will endeavour to confute his Assertion, that I affect to decry the Spanish Nation. It is true that I said, and do say it again, that they are proud, haughty, lazy, superstitious, and excessively submissive to the Monks. But tho' I thus expos'd their Faults, as I have done those of other Nations, I have done justice to their Virtues. Without repeating all I have ever said on this Subject, I will here cite only a few Lines from my 106th Letter: During the Reign of Philip V. there have been very able Men in the Spanish

P R E F A C E. xix

But what is still more singular than all this beyond Comparison is, that I have receiv'd Advice that they are actually re-printing this Work at Avignon, and that two Volumes of it are already publish'd, but miserably mangled and deformed; which is the common Fate of every Edition that is counterfeited in the Pope's Dominions.

In the Press,

CHINESE LETTERS; or a PHILOSOPHICAL, HISTORICAL and CRITICAL CORRESPONDENCE between a CHINESE at Paris, and his Friends in China, Muscovy, Persia and Japan. By the Author of the JEWISH SPY.

THE JEWISH SPY.

LETTER CXXI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi, at Constantinople.

YOU know, dear Isaac, how much I was prejudiced against the Cabbalists. Shall I own to you my Weakness? Since I have been in this Country, a Conversation I had with a Person addicted to the occult Sciences, hath inclined me to believe that many Things I formerly thought ridiculous, are neither impossible nor incompatible with true Philosophy. Not that I approve all that is said by the Disciples of Paracelsus. But I think, that tho' it is certain there are no such Beings as Gnomes, Sylphs, Salamanders, and

VOL. IV. B On-

Ondines *, yet there is nothing in the Belief of them absurd, or contrary to the Laws of Nature, as most of our modern Philosophers pretend. My Reasons are these. What Weight they will have with you, I know not.

In order to deny the Possibility of Existence to any Thing, there must be Proof not only of its Non-existence, but of its Incapacity of Existence. But I find no Proofs of the latter Sort against Sylphs, Salamanders, Gnomes and Ondines. What Impossibility is there in supposing, that there are animate Bodies composed of so subtile and delicate a Matter as not to fall under the Cognizance of our Senses? We admit that they are not strong enough to penetrate the Recesses of Nature, where the first Elements of Things lie hid. They perceive none but the more gross Causes. We can derive from thence no Right to deny, that those delicate Principles are in being. Why then should we believe, that there cannot be animated Creatures, composed of a Matter so thin as not to strike our Senses?

Before the Invention of Microscopes, we knew not that Vinegar contained an astonishing Quantity of Worms; we boldly deny'd that there were little Fishes in all the Water we drank; and yet we have been many Years convinced of the Existence of all these Animals. Since then, there is a Number of animated Creatures in Water, which our naked Eyes cannot discover, why may not the like be found in the Air and in the other Elements?

But it will be said, these Insects are not concealed from us but through their Littleness, whereas it is pretended tended that the Gnomes, Sylphs, &c. are of the ordinary Size of Men.

* According to the Cabbalists, the Sylphs inhabit the Air, the Gnomes the Earth, that is, within it, the Salamanders in the Region of Fire, and the Ondines the Water.

To this I answer, that the Height of the Gnomes and of the Sylphs is no Reason why they should become visible, while the Parts of which they are compounded are supposed to be extremely delicate. A Space of Air six Foot long strikes the Sight no more than one of a Foot or of an Inch. In like manner, supposing the Gnomes to be composed of a light and aerial Matter, their Stature would contribute nothing to their becoming visible. Let us imagine a Column of those Worms which are found in Vinegar, extending from the Earth to the Sky; our Eyes, without the Assistance of Microscopes, would not be at all affected by this Column, notwithstanding its immense Extension, because its component Parts fall not under the Cognizance of our Senses. Thus, tho' an infinite Number of Atoms fill up the Space between the Earth and the Moon, yet to us it appears void, because the Matter with which it is filled, is not discernable by our Senses. It is to no purpose, therefore, to oppose the Existence of these Elementary People, by alledging, that we do not perceive them. It suffices to establish the Possibility of the Thing, to prove that a great Number of living Creatures actually exist, which our Senses, unassisted, cannot discern.

When we once admit, that the Air may be peopled with invisible Creatures, it naturally follows, that the Earth, the Water, and the Fire, which are Elements composed of Parts more easily united, have also in them the Power of producing a Number of Bodies which God may animate, and yet by the Delicacy of their Parts, they will escape our Senses. But, reply the Philosophers, we have no Idea of these pretended reasonable Creatures; we know not how they exist ; we are intirely ignorant of their Forms and Figures, and it is ridiculous to admit a Thing of which we have not any Notion.

This manner of reasoning, with Submission to the Learned among the Moderns, is far from being conclusive. Have you, it may be replied to them, any more distinct Notion of your own Soul ? Do you comprehend any thing more about it, than that it is a Spirit ? Do you know what Form or Figure it has ? No, without doubt. You admit, however, its Existence. Why then will you deny that of Sylphs and Gnomes, of which you have a less confused Idea than of a Spirit ? Because whatever is supposed to be material, however delicate it may be, falls under the Cognizance of the Human Understanding.

The Wit of Man is so bounded, that it is not only very possible it may not have any Idea of certain Creatures ; but it might even very easily happen, that a great Number of knowing People might, nevertheless, be ignorant of the Possibility of Animals living in Water. Let us suppose that a certain Number of Men live in a Country of a dry sandy Soil, far from the Sea and Rivers, and furnished only with Pits. The Thing is by no means impossible. In many of the Defarts of Arabia there is only such Pits dug by the Bedouins. These Men, without doubt, would have no Idea of Fish, if they did not hear of them from others. They would certainly look upon it as a Thing absurd to suppose, that any Creature could live long in Water when they saw such Land-Animals presently die, as happen to fall therein. I ask, if Fish would exist the less, or if the Reasonings of these sort of People would destroy the Cod in the Mediterranean, or the Whales in the Ocean ?

It is the same thing with respect to the Philosophers

phers who deny the Possibility of Sylphs and of Gnomes; they know nothing of what passes in the Air; their short Sight represents it to them as a great wide Space, a large and extended Mass, and they pretend to judge of what passes in that Mass by the Ideas they have of a void Space, which is intirely opposite thereto. For tho' the Philosophers are persuaded that the Extent between the Earth and the Firmament is full of Bodies; or, to express myself better, is one intire Body; yet their Senses seem to get the better of their Meditations when they deny the Possibility of the existing of these elementary People.

You see, my dear Isaac, the Reasons upon which I ground my Opinion. As to the rest, I am fully persuaded that we cannot have any Sort of Commerce with these Sylphs and Gnomes. I say I am as fully persuaded of the impossibility of this, as of the Possibility of their Existence. Far from giving in to the ridiculous Tales and chimerical Visions of the Cabalists, I affirm, that if there should exist such Elementary People, they can never render themselves visible to Men, as it is also impossible for Men to strengthen or quicken their Senses to such a Degree as to be able to penetrate what God and Nature think proper to conceal from them. I can't help laughing when I hear a Cabalist gravely tell me, That concentrating the Fire of the World by concave Mirrors in a Globe of Glass, gaining thereby a certain solar Powder, which being purified from the other Elements, and a certain Quantity thereof taken daily, I may exalt the Fire within me to such a Degree, as to become, in some measure, of a fiery Nature.

The Secret for obtaining the Familiarity of Gnomes, Sylphs and Nymphs, seems to me not a grain less ridiculous. It consists in taking a Glass *full of Air, mingled with Water or with Earth; this is to be left for a Month exposed to the Sun; then the Elements are to be separated; which being performed, we have a wonderful Medicine, capable of exalting in us whatever Element we would have predominant, and of rendering our Senses quick enough to discern these Elementary People.

Good Sense and the Light of Nature are sufficient to shew me the Folly of this sort of Reasoning, and the Impossibility there is of effecting any Thing by these Cabalistical Secrets. For suppose I would make an Acquaintance with a Salamander, of what Use would all the solar Powder be that I could possibly amass together? Would it ever destroy in me that terrestrial Matter that is every Day augmented by my Food? Could it ever get the better of the Air by which I live and breathe? Suppose I had swallowed ever so much of this Powder, a Quarter of an Hour after I take in a great Quantity of Air, and my Lungs, which receive and reject, my Nostrils and my Mouth which give it Entrance into my Body, are the sworn Enemies of the Element of Fire, which I would have predominant over the rest. The same may be said of the other Secrets, which tend to render some one Element predominant in Man, and thereby to give him an igneous or aquatic Nature.

The Blindness of the Cabalists goes yet a greater length. They assure us, that by applying to the Navel a little of the Earth prepared for obtaining the Society of the Gnomes, one may sustain the want of Food

* The English Reader may see this System set in a beautiful Light in POPE's RAPE of the Lock. If he likes better to read it in Prose, he may satisfy himself by perusing Count Gabalus, whence our Author borrows his Quotations.

Food and Drink, without any sort of Inconvenience. The famous Paracelsus affirms that he tried this; and it must be owned, that he was either a great Fool or an impudent Lyar, who durst assert so evident an Imposture as this is to the Face of the Publick.

I am not astonished at all, when I see a Cabalist writing such Impertinencies as these, because at the same time I discern Stories as absurd and as contrary to good Sense, as gravely told by the most eminent Doctors in all Religions. How many Lyes have been written by our Rabbies on the Subject of the Satyrs and Fauns of Antiquity? Rabbi Abraham really imagined there were such Creatures, but that they were imperfect, because God was surprized by the Approach of the Evening of the Sabbath, and had not time sufficient to make an end of them. Among the Nazarenes, Tertullian, Iustin, Lactantius, Cyprian, Clemens of Alexandria and Athenagoras, fancied these Fauns were Angels transformed into this Shape for the Crime they committed, when God threw so many of them into Hell; and they concluded this Fall of Angels to have happened on account of their suffering themselves to become enamour'd of Women. The Pagans push'd this Error still farther; for they held these Fauns to be Divinities.

Among Sentiments so extraordinary as these are, it is impossible that a Philosopher who makes use of his Reason, should adopt any one of them. They are equally ridiculous and contrary to the Light of Nature. It may be even that the Satyrs, as described by the Ancients, never did exist; and that many useless Dissertations have been made on the Ideas of some Painter or Poet, who was the Creator of these imaginary Beings. I am of opinion, that vious to the explaining of a Thing, we ought seriously to consider whether it exists, or whether ever it did exist. Descartes has given us a long Explication of the perpetual Lamps that are to be found in the Tombs of the Ancients; and we have since been convinced that the Fact is false. Democritus put his Wit to the torture for several Days to account for Wool which he fancied he had found growing on the Figs in his Garden. He made thereupon a Discourse, with which himself and his Friends were very well satisfied. His Maid, however, diverted herself at their Expence by disabusing them, shewing that all the learned Researches of this Philosopher was so much Study and Pains thrown away. It may be the Fauns of Antiquity greatly resembled the Figs of Democritus; and those who have made Dissertations on these Half-Men Half-Brutes would be greatly surprized, if they should find in any ancient Author, that they never existed any where but in his Imagination and in his Writings.

I will not however, dear Isaac, pretend to affirm, that what is said with regard to Fauns, ought to be considered, as invented at pleasure; on the contrary, I believe their Existence possible. We read in the Life of Paul the Hermit, written by Jerome, a famous Doctor among the Nazarenes, as also in that of Anthony, another Hermit, composed by Athanasius, that these solitary Persons had long Conversations with Fauns; and that they owned to them that they were not unacquainted with the Existence of a Deity *. If we refuse Credit to these Authors, we

* According to St. Jerome, St. Anthony met with a Centaur, exactly like what is described in the Poets. The same Author assures us, that not long after this St. Anthony saw also a Satyr, resembling those we see in Paintings.

we find in Pliny, that Satyrs are frequent in the Indies. Plutarch assures us, that they presented to Sylla as he pass'd by Dyrachium, now Durazzo in Albania, a living Satyr. The Roman considered him attentively, but could make nothing of his Language, his Voice being excessively harsh, seeming to participate of the Neighing of a Horse, and the Cry of a Goat *.

This Passage in History inclines me to think, that all the Satyrs we hear of, were no other than Monsters produced by criminal Converse between Mankind and the Females of other Animals; and that these Creatures, far from having Virtues superior to Mortals, had much more of the Brute than of the Man, not being able to express themselves but in all respects like the Satyr of Sylla. The Superstition of Paganism made Deities of these Half-Men, the Nazarenes will have them to be Angels or Demons, the Jews imperfect Creatures; the Philosopher, seeming to disdain the Examination of this Question, contents himself with denying their Existence, that he may not be obliged to explain their Natures.

Preserve thy Health, dear Isaac, live content and satisfied, and may the God of our Fathers heap Riches upon thee.

Hambourgh.

B 5

LETTER,

Conspicit (Antonius) hominem equo mixtum, cui opinio Poëtarum Hypocentauro vocabulum indidit . . . Nec mora inter saxosum convallem haud grandem, homunculem vidit, aduncis naribus, fronte cornibus asperatâ, -cujus extrema pars corporis in caprarum pedes desinebat. Hieronymus epistol. iii. de vita Pauli, primi Eremitæ. See also the 4th Part of the Secret Memoirs of the Republick of Letters; wherein the Wonders reported by St. Jerome are fully considered.

* Plutarch in the Life of Sylla.

L E T T E R CXXII.

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

I Don't know, dear Isaac, to what Cause to attribute that violent Hatred which all People profess to have against those of our Nation. Whatever Religion they have, in whatever Climate they inhabit, they seem to agree in this Point. The Mahomedans, the Popish Nazarenes, the Reform'd, the Arminians and the Lutherans despise, equally agree in despising us, and carry their Despite to Excess. I for some time thought that this Antipathy might be occasioned by a Diversity of Belief. But I was obliged to change this Way of thinking, when I saw Numbers differing in Religion, who had notwithstanding the most perfect Esteem for each other. The Quakers differ as widely as we from the Nazarenes; they have no Sacrament, not even so much as that of Baptism; however, the Nazarenes do not either hate or despise them.

We must look therefore for some other Cause than Religion, in order to account for that Antipathy which all Nations have to us. I do indeed believe, that Religion influences the lower Class of People in their Notions of Jews, in some measure; but it is certain, that it does not determine them intirely; wherefore, there must be some particular Subject whence the unanimous Hatred of all People must flow. Did it come purely from Difference in point

point of Faith, why should the Turks hate us more than they do the Nazarenes? Or these latter why should they detest us more than Turks?

I believe, dear Isaac, that we ought to seek in the evil Conduct of our own Brethren, what we generally attribute to Difference in Religion. If we credit certain Nazarene Historians, we shall find in their Writings, that the horrid Crimes of certain Jews have in all times had desperate Consequences in respect to our Nation. Rigord, Physician and Historiographer to Philip Augustus writes, that in 1180, our Brethren settled in Paris would needs make a Sacrifice on the Solemnization of the Passover, supposing they might draw down the divine Clemency, by immolating a Nazarene. They carried off, says he, a young Lad of twelve Years old, whose Name was Richard, the Son of a rich Tradesman, and after they had almost by whipping tore off his Flesh from his Bones, they crucified him. This barbarous Action coming to the knowledge of the French, all who had any Concern in this dreadful Sacrifice were put to death, and our whole Nation forever banished that Kingdom.

France is not the only Country wherein we are charged with such Cruelties. The Inhabitants of the City of Trent commemorate annually a Thing of the same kind perpetrated on a little Boy called Simonet, the Son of a Shoemaker whose Name was Simon. The Jews, say they, having stript the Boy, did in the most cruel Manner draw out all his Blood, in order to make use of it in celebrating the Passover, and afterwards threw the Carcase into a common Shore, which ran under the Synagogue. The Thing being discovered, the Jews were severely punished; and the Nazarenes shew to this very Day, the House in which this villainous Act was perpetrated.

I really cannot think of settling my Opinion as to these Facts, when I either read them or hear them talk'd of. I am thoroughly satisfied, that such Cruelties are no where practised in our Synagogues at this Day, and I can hardly bring my self to believe that they were ever practised heretofore. However, these Accounts are accompanied with such Circumstances, that it is almost impossible not to admit the Matters of Fact. But after all, if it were true that there were some Jews so wicked and so furious as to run into Excesses of this Sort, ought their Crimes to affect a whole Nation? There is nothing more easy, than the Proof that only a few mad and vile People were ever guilty of Things of this Nature, and that the Jews in general were not only ignorant of them, but if they had been acquainted with such Practices would have had them in the utmost Detestation. In order to establish this, we need only consider what the Historiographer of Philip Augustus says. He assures us, that the Criminals were punished with Death, and the Remainder were banished the Kingdom. There were but fifteen or sixteen Jews executed; if more had been found guilty, without doubt the Nazarines would not have spared them. The whole Nation thus exiled, had nothing to do with these Cruelties. However, by astonishing ill Luck, that Horror which the Crime of a few particular People justly merited, rested upon the Nation; and they are persuaded in France, that the Jews in general approve of such detestable Sacrifices. There needs no more, my Friend, to render them odious to the whole World: What can there be more scandalous to a Nation, than to have been driven out of a great Kingdom for such abominable Deeds?

It is not solely to Prejudices of this sort that we ought ought to attribute the Aversion and the Dislike which People have towards us. The sordid Avarice, and the Perfidy of some of our Brethren, have made us mortally hated. Thus the innocent suffer for the Crime of the guilty, and a Number of Israelites worthy the Esteem of all honest Men, zealous Observers of the divine Law, are without Distinction confounded with People whom themselves despise, and whom they are the most ready to condemn.

Our Rabbins ought to apply themselves to writing Books of Morality. Such Works would be much more useful, and do us more honour among such as differ from us in Religion, than that monstrous Heap of Visions which are to be found in most of our Authors, and which serve only to discredit our Writers and our Nation. I would be content to see our Doctors attentive in explaining the Law, and in applying it principally to the discouraging the Practice of those Vices most reigning amongst us; insisting constantly on the heinousness of the Act of taking away another Man's Property in the Sight of God, and the Baseness of Usury in the Sight of Men. If they could once bring this Doctrine to prevail, and could induce our Brethren to be less attached to, and susceptible of the Temptation of filthy Lucre, I doubt not but they would enable them to regain the Esteem and Regard of all Nations. Why should they refuse it us, if we were worthy of it? I have before shewn, that Difference in Religion is not a Reason which determines the Esteem or the Dislike of Men. Besides, dear Isaac, ours hath in itself such Beauties, that if the Jews were once become a virtuous People, they would be at least secure of the Friendship of Philosophers, learned and reasonable Men. But far, my Friend, very far are the Rabbins from endeavouring to eradicate Avarice from the Hearts of the Israelites, on the contrary, they are the first themselves of giving Examples of fordid Covetousness; insomuch, that it may be said of the Prayers in our Synagogues, as one of the Ancients said of those heretofore made by the Pagans: Do we observe, says he, any go to the Temples in order to beseech the Gods to give him Perfection in Eloquence, or to discover to him the Secrets of Philosophy? Nay, do they so much as ask Rectitude of Mind, or Health of Body? But of all who go to the Capitol, this is the Custom, before they reach the very Threshold of the Gate, the one promises great Offerings to the Deity he worships, provided he hastens the Death of a rich Relation; another, that he may discover a hidden Treasure; a third, that he may be lucky enough to acquire a large Estate in Business *.

very

Such are the Prayers which most of the Jews offer to the Divinity. They forget that they are forbidden in the Law to wish for the Goods of another, and the Rabbins, far from putting them in mind of this divine Precept, seem to have banished it entirely from their own Thoughts. After this we need not think it strange that the Nazarenes have propagated a certain malicious Fable against us, viz. That we have made an Oath to cheat as often as we have an Opportunity. They judge of our Precepts by our Actions. I am sensible, my Friend,

* Quis unquam venit in templum & votum fecit, si ad eloquentiam pervenisset? Quis, si philosophiæ fontem invenisset? Ac ne bonam quidem mentem, aut bonam valetudinem petunt. Sed statim antequam limen Capitolii tangent, alius donum promittit, si propinquum divitem extulerit; alius si thesaurum effoderit; alius si ad trecenties H. S. salvus pervenerit. Petronius in Satir.

Friend, that the famous Leo of Modena hath refuted with great Quickness such as have endeavoured to fix so criminal a Usage upon us, and hath well shewn how far we are from following such pernicious Maxims, or from regarding them as Points of Doctrine. But notwithstanding the learned Writings of that excellent Jew, there are at this Day a Multitude of Nazarenes who persuade themselves they do not do us the least Injustice in imputing to us this criminal Sentiment.

We shall never be able to regain the Esteem of other Nations, but by changing our Conduct entirely, and becoming as remarkable for our Disinterestedness, as we are at present for our Avarice. Not that I pretend to prevent our Brethren from making an honest Profit, or from gaining by Commerce. There is nothing more lawful. What I would be at is this ; that they should be more sincere, and that Uprightness and Candour should be visible in all their Dealings.

When I have defended this Opinion against Jews of a contrary Sentiment, and who did not think we were bound to use so much Delicacy in our Dealings with the Nazarenes, I could never perceive any Strength in their Reasons. We pay, say they, exorbitant Imposts. Princes, in many Countries look upon us as so many Beasts. They sell us the very Air that we breathe. 'Tis by Dint of Money that we obtain a Residence among them. In some Towns of Germany they oblige us to pay twenty Pence an Hour as long as we stay. Is not this an astonishing Imposition ? Are we obliged to act with Candour towards those who so cruelly persecute us ? And are we not at Liberty to make Reprisals on the Nazarenes, who thus enrich themselves by our Labours ?

Whatever at first Sight there may seem to be in these these Reasons, they are intirely overthrown by this single Principle, that it is not justifiable to commit one Crime in order to punish another. In this respect I find the Morality of the Nazarenes admirable. It must be owned that they do not practise it; but it is however one of the principal Points of their Religion, that we are not to commit Evil upon any Account. Their civil Laws agree on this Subject with their religious Precepts. It must be owned there are some Ultramontane Doctors who have maintained this impious Principle, That Subjects may revolt against their Princes when they are Hereticks. But these detestable Opinions have been condemned in all Nations whose Superstition hath not stifled the Sense of Honour and Religion. The Parliaments of France have ordered Books containing such Principles to be torn by the Hands of the Hangman, and the Universities have fully refuted them. To say the Truth, Princes themselves, who are so much outraged by the spreading of such Notions, have sometimes shewn no great Liking to that Zeal with which they have been condemned, which must to thee appear incomprehensible. However, hitherto France and Germany have rejected with Horror all Doctrines tending to violate the Respect due to Sovereigns.

It is to the Love of their Subjects that many Princes owe the Preservation of their Glory. While they are absorbed in Pleasures, and seem quite to forget the high Rank they possess; Rome, always ambitious, and always attentive to the Means of overturning the Rights of Kings, fails not of making Attempts against their Authorities: But the People being alarmed at the first Appearance of a Novelty, big with pernicious Consequences, oppose thereby so strong a Barrier to the Ambition of the Sovereign Pontiffs, as affords Princes time to awake out of their Lethargy and to defend their Rights.

So-

Take Care of thy self, dear Isaac, and may the God of our Fathers render thee prosperous.

Hamburgh.

L E T T E R CXXIII.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople, to AARON MONCECA.

I Divert my self with considering daily the different Systems of Philosophers, without giving however intire Credit to any. I consider them all as probable, but I believe there is none without its Difficulties, and in which it is by no means hard to find weak Places, if one were inclined to attack them. I leave to a certain Race of Wrongheads that Adoration which they pretend to pay to their favourite Authors. Whatever the Reputation of a Philosopher may be, I never suffer it to draw me into a false Admiration of him. There are, in my Opinion, many Things hid from all Men, and which the modern Philosophers have not a bit better explained than the Ancients.

An Arabian of my Acquaintance has within these few Days lent me a Manuscript. I have read it with Attention. I find many things in it very amusing: But, upon the whole, I think there is very little Instruction to be gathered from the whole Work. The Author's Scheme is this: He pre- tends, tends, that Men, Animals, and all that we see invested with Life, were produced by the Sea. The first Fault I find with this System is, that it is directly opposite to the Existence of a Deity. As I have an infinite Contempt for such blind Philosophers as are not struck with this first and apparent Truth, so you may guess that there is in this System something very pleasant and very whimsical, since notwithstanding this capital Error I could read it with any Pleasure. See then in few Words a brief Exposition of this System.

The Arabian Author pretends, That there hath happened insensibly a great Change in the Earth, so that what we now see dry, was heretofore covered with Water. He affirms, that the Sea and Waters wasted by Degrees, and the Earth being dried by the Heat of the Sun, did after many Ages assume much the same Form that it has at present.

This is his System with respect to the World in general. Now, let me tell you what he says in particular of Man, and other terrestrial Animals. When the Waters were consumed to a certain Degree, and of course a certain Part of the Earth lay bare, some aquatick Animals accustomed themselves by little and little, to go and browse and feed upon the Grass; that the Man, the Ox, the Horse, &c. constantly went back at first into the Water; but, in process of Time going farther and farther from the Bank, they in the end accustomed themselves to live on the Earth. The Sun, by the Heat of his Rays, quickly altered the Texture of their Skins, and gave to some of them Hair and Hides, as we see them have. He pretends, that Habit, which is a second Nature, did in process of Time make the Issue of these aquatick Animals incapable of living any where but in the Earth. That in like manner, the Birds too lost the Capacity of entering the Waters, because they were not accustomed to it from the time of their being hatch'd, except in such as were call'd Sea and River Fowl; the Parents of which had never strayed far from their Mother-Element. In support of this extraordinary Doctrine, our Author reasons thus: We see that the Sun changes intirely the Form and Colour of Men; Children are born white in the midst of Ethiopia, and the first Covering of their Heads is Hair, and not Wool. It is not till some Days after that they become black; and there is a very considerable Space intervenes before any thing like Wool appears. The Reason of this is, because Men always retain a strong Tincture of their first Quality; and that during the time Men were aquatick Animals, they were all white, and had none of them Wool in place of Hair; but since they have quitted their ancient Element, they have been chang'd more or less according as the Vapors of the Earth, or the Heat of the Sun have operated upon them.
in

All Animals, continues the Arab Writer, retain even to this Day some of their first Qualities. There are none of them, but what can swim and live for some time in the Water; the Cow, the Horse, the Dog, and all other Creatures swim naturally; Man would do the same thing, if Fear did not hinder Nature from exerting those Motions with which, however, she is very well acquainted. In some Seas Sea-Men are yet found; the Dutch Historians mention a Girl who was preserved a long time at Harlem about three hundred Years ago, and who was stopt upon the Shore just as she came out of the Sea. In many other Countries, Creatures have been seen half Fish, half of a human Form, all which is sufficient to shew, that the Element of Water is by no means incompatible with an organized Body

Body like to that of Man; and that there is nothing but Habit, and their being accustomed from their Birth to breathe the dry Air on shore, which hinders Men from living in the Bottom of the Sea.

See, my dear Friend, the Scheme of this Arabian, who is to this Day busy in finding out Proofs of his Hypothesis. He asked me my Opinion. I told him very sincerely, that all Systems which did not admit the Existence of a Deity, and which supposed as the first Principle of all Things, a certain Arrangement of Matter by the Hand of Chance, would fall into unsustainable Opinions, by building a Castle on the Sands, which the slightest Motion must overturn from Top to Bottom.

It is indeed a surprizing thing, that the Philosophers did not perfectly comprehend the Necessity of a Thing which the most simple People now-a-days clearly see the Truth of. The most sublime Verities, says an English Author*, which were scarce accessable to the brightest and best cultivated Wits among the Pagans, are at present become familiar, even to the most confined Understandings. This opens a large Field of satisfactory Reflections to a Man who considers Things with the Eye of a Philosopher, and who possesses a Soul capable of being charmed at the mighty Progress which useful Knowledge hath made among Mankind.

What, my Friend, would all the Greek and Roman Philosophers say, who after thirty or forty Years spent in Study, acquired so imperfect an Idea of the Deity? What, I repeat it, would they say, if they were to return to the World, and find every little Scholar in Philosophy able to shew them with the greatest Clearness, that God is not material, because whatsoever is corporal is subject to Division; sion ; and whatsoever can be divided, cannot be God. For then either there must be as many Gods as Parts, or the Deity must be compounded of certain Parts not divine.

* The Spectator.

The Astonishment of these Philosophers would still increase, when they were shewn how great their Error was in admitting Matter to be co-eternal with God. They would learn, that there could be nothing co-eternal with him, since he could not then be Almighty. For not having created Matter he could not destroy it. Now, it is equally ridiculous to affirm, that a Thing which has no Beginning can have an End, or that God can exist and not be Almighty. These Greeks and Romans, of whom some boast so much, would be surprized that they themselves did not make these Reflections, or that the Prejudices imbibed in their Infancy, and strengthened by Education, should be able to hinder them from coming at such clear and easy Truths.

It is to us, it is to us, Monceca, that the whole World is indebted for the Knowledge of God. The first Nazarenes who taught the Heathens the Unity and Spirituality of the Divinity, were Jews separating from our Communion. Passion has made our Brethren say a great deal of Ill of them. However, it must be allowed that they were truly great Men, who hazarded their Lives to withdraw the human Species from Idolatry ; if the Unity of God hath been preached throughout the Universe, it is solely owing to them.

When I was a Rabbi at Constantinople I durst not talk in this Style. My Brethren would have looked upon me with Horror ; they would have taxed me with inclining to Nazarenism, as if one ought not to render Justice to Merit wherever it is found ;
and

and that the Difference of Belief obliges one to disguise one's Sentiments, and to despise People really worthy of Esteem. Let us, my Friend, leave this Madness to narrow Minds. It is a Conduct only worthy of Blockheads and Fanaticks; and when we see a Man of true Genius run into Invectives against People of Probity, one may boldly affirm, that it is not his Zeal for Religion, but his Ambition, Hatred, or some other Passion, which moves him thereto. When Pascal wrote his Provincial Letters, he thought less of defending Nazarenism than of outraging the Jesuits; and when those People persecuted Arnauld, it was the destroying of their Enemy, and not the Good of Religion that they had in View. Too many Divines who dip in Controversy, hate their Adversaries more than the Errors they maintain. It is the same thing with other Writers, when they come to differ with each other; they do not criticise a Work because it is ill written, but because it is written by an Adversary.

When I was in Germany, I was acquainted with two Authors who were continually praising each other. The one was the eldest Son of Apolla, the other the Darling and the Favourite of the Muses. After all, they fell out on account of a Piece which the one wrote, and the other, contrary to his Custom, found some fault with. This was sufficient to sow everlasting Division. They wrote against each other immediately with all the Vehemence imaginable; they published mutual Edicts of Banishment from Parnassus, and supported these new Sentiments of theirs in all Companies with a Petulancy not to be endured. They blamed excessively those very Pieces which they had before as much commended; nor can I conceive how they could, after saying so many handsome Things the one of the other, ther, deviate into such Scurrility and Abuse. This Conduct, said I to one of them, will hurt you in the Opinion of the World. What would you have your Readers think of your Works, when they find you blaming now what you commended a while ago. They will believe, and with Reason, that you commend without Grounds, and that you censure without Cause. What signifies that, reply'd the Author, provided I can but destroy the Praises that I have formerly given the Man who has had the Confidence to blame my Writings, I am content. I praised him because he praised me, and I censure him because he censured me. If he was to write even better than he did, I will persist always in saying, that he writes nothing worth reading.

This is the manner, dear Aaron, in which Authors generally treat each other. There are very few amongst them who commend their Brethren without Hopes of Return. In the Republick of Letters, Eulogies are a Sort of Goods in which there is always a great Trade. I believe it is pretty much the same thing in all other States; when one praises a Person, one is apt to be uneasy if he says nothing in return. Self-love is deeply wounded by that Silence which mortifies the natural Vanity of Men, and which seems to imply a mighty Superiority in him who receives, over him who bestows Panegyrick.

I believe, my Friend, that we may lay it down as a general Principle, that most Men commend from one of these two Motives; either that they may be commended, or that they may be rewarded. There are very few, who from the sole Principle of doing Justice to Merit, make it their Practice to speak well of the good Qualities of others. It is true, that generally speaking, we look upon this noble noble and generous Way of Proceeding, as a Virtue frequently to be met with; but if we examine Things more closely, we shall find that the Number of these disinterested People is but small.

Be careful of your self, dear Monceca, live content and happy, and excuse my writing to you so seldom.

Cairo.

LETTER CXXIV.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE Nazarenes have a laudable Custom, which I cannot help blaming our Ancestors for not having observed. They go to the very Extremities of the World, in order to preach the Existence of one God, All-good, All-mighty and All-merciful, There is no Country, how barbarous, how distant soever, whither they have not gone to destroy Idols, and to insult them on their Altars. If these People used a little more softness in their manner of communicating these sublime Truths, and if their Behaviour were not in some kind inconsistent with the Doctrines which they preach, I should look upon these Missionaries as the greatest and most deserving Men in the Universe. Is there, in effect, any thing so glorious, as for Men to devote themselves intirely to the Service of an infinite Number of Persons, under the Slavery of most absurd Opinions, and plung'd in the frightful Abyss of Idolatry? Is there, I say, any thing more noble than to make the Delivery of such Persons the Business of one's Life?
in

If such as make it their Employment to enlighten these unfortunate Pagans, contented themselves with exerting Reason and good Sense, instead of using Force and Violence when they have it in their power, Idolatrous Nations would much sooner be persuaded of the Existence and Unity of God. But the Cruelties which the Spaniards and Portuguese have exercised in certain Countries, and which are far from being unknown to other savage Nations, give them an extraordinary Hatred and unconquerable Aversion towards such as come to instruct them. What is it one can really imagine an Indian can think of those terrible Executions he hears to have been done by the Inquisition at Goa? These Folks, will he say to himself, who come to inform me of a God, perfectly good, and merciful in all things, offer up daily Numbers of their Brethren to this same God, and are continually sprinkling this great Altar of his the Earth, with the Blood of his Creatures. They most cruelly commit to the Flames, Men of the greatest Worth and Probity, because they have not Power enough over their own Minds, to force the Belief of certain Propositions which seem to them contrary to Equity and Reason. The Fierceness and Cruelty of a Missionary in those Countries, where their Power is establish'd, hinders the Fruit of their Arguments, even where they use no other Weapons.

You will ask me perhaps, my Friend, how it comes to pass that I, who am a Jew, should interest my self in the Propagation of the Faith of the Nazarenes? The Answer is easy and natural. It is not the Propagation of the Principles of the Nazarene Religion for which I am concerned, but the propagating the Knowledge of the Deity. You know that I have always thought, as well as you, that Men might be saved in all Religions, provided they were truly virtuous. Now there is nothing so capable of leading Men to the Practice of Honesty and Virtue as the Sense of a Divine Being, provided it be not clouded, or in a manner extinguished by an insupportable Load of incomprehensible and contradictory Doctrines, and of Ceremonies equally ridiculous and vain. We ought naturally to wish the Good, and to desire the Salvation of all Mankind. We are therefore obliged to the Missionaries, who by their Preaching facilitate the saving such as are sunk in Idolatry, by teaching them the Knowledge of God and of his Will. There is no Philosopher, of what Religion soever he be, who can think otherwise, if at least he does not suffer himself to be blinded by his Prejudices, and by an unreasonable Hatred of those who are not of his own Opinion in all things.

It were to be wish'd, that when the Jews were dispersed, after Titus had destroyed Jerusalem, they had followed this Maxim of the Nazarenes, and had made it their Business to preach and to propagate the Law of Moses throughout the Universe, instead of keeping to themselves those Treasures which they received from Heaven. Had they acted thus, one can hardly conceive, that the Number of Missionaries considered, and the Beauty of that Religion adverted to, which these Missionaries were to preach; I say, a proper Weight given to these Things, one can scarce believe they could have fail'd persuading all the Nations in the World. What Weapons could either Ignorance or Superstition have opposed to the simple and evident Truths they would have revealed?

The more I consider my Religion, the more I am convinced that it is equally reasonable and magnificent.

nificent. One only God, the Creator of Heaven and Earth, a Being infinitely wise and good, who preserves and governs the Universe by his Power; who will punish the Wicked, and who will reward the Good. The Wicked, who are they? Such as presume to do unto others what they would not bear to be done to themselves: And the Good, who are they? Such as, not content with avoiding any Injustice towards their Neighbour, practise also towards him whatsoever they wish he should practise towards them, as my Friend the Latin Poet happily expresses it in one Line:

Quæ tibi vis fieri, facias. Hæc summula legis.

To others do, what you from them expect,
Nor ever this the Sum of Law neglect.

Here, my Friend, is the whole of our Religion. All its Precepts are contained within this narrow Compass. Whatever our Rabbins have added, may be considered, if you please, as useless and superfluous. What Mortal, who makes the least Use of his Reason, but must acknowledge the Evidence of the Truths we declare, and give them his Assent? I repeat it again, my Friend, that if we had been possessed of a Zeal like that of the Nazarenes, for making known the Beauty and Sanctity of our Religion, we had certainly drawn to us a Number of Profelytes. But since our People, either through Negligence, or which is the real Truth, out of a Dislike of other Nations, hath neglected to make known to them the Deity, we ought, as Philosophers, to be charm'd when we perceive that the Missionaries have supplied our Defect, and have done to Mankind that Service which we disdained to render them.

Many of the Nazarenes have written in sharp Terms against their Missionaries; they have reproach'd them on the head of their bad Conduct; and have alledged that they have frustrated thereby the good Design they went upon. These Reflections have made some hasty People conclude, that all the Missionaries have been alike wanting in their Duty. But this is giving in to an apparent Error: We may say without exaggerating, that the Good they have done very far surpasses the Evil. It is true that some Instances may be given, where Slips of theirs have destroyed the Fruits of many Years Application. However, the Crimes of particular People ought not to fall upon Missionaries in general. I own it were to be wish'd there had never gone to the Indies, or into other Countries inhabited by Idolaters, any but French and German Missionaries, bred up in Countries where the Inquisition is abhorr'd. For these Preachers, if we except a few of a certain Order, seldom make use of any violent Measures; and this Tenderness of theirs, is much more useful and efficacious in the Business of their Mission, than the Fierceness of the Spaniards and Portuguese. One of the last mentioned Nation, whose Name was Menczes, made several Attempts in order to the Conversion of the Inhabitants of the Island of Zacotora; but the extraordinary Cruelties he had exercised amongst other People, where he was supported by the Power of the King of Cochin, induced these Islanders to revolt rather than receive him. They fell into a Rage, says a Nazarene Historian; at the very mention of their embracing the Religion of the Portuguese. Nay, they carried their Aversion so far as to protest, that they would rather suffer fer Death than embrace the Opinions taught by those Missionaries, whom they stiled a perverse and infamous Race of Men.

*. Dissertations Historiques & Recherchés sur la Religion Chrétienne dans les Indes, p. 304.

Another Missionary, whose Name was Aiphonso Mendez, demolished all that his Predecessors had been doing. As he was a Jesuit, his Enemies made that a Pretext to attack the Order. They published several Pieces, wherein they accused the Jesuits in general of prejudicing the Missions; but in these they exaggerated many Things, and in some others disguised the Truth not a little. To do Justice, it must be acknowledged, that the Missionaries of this Order have made a great Progress in Countries, where before their Arrival the People had not any right Notions of the Deity, and that they commonly behave with a great deal of Tenderness. Nay, they are reproached with being but too tractable, and with having push'd beyond its proper Extent, their Complaisance for the Idolaters they had to do with. But whichever way they take it, it is impossible for them to content all People, or to hinder their Enemies from finding fault with their Conduct. The disinterested part, however, of their Adversaries do them Justice, and acknowledge that there have been in the Indies, and elsewhere, Men of their Order of great Worth and Probity. Let me quote to you what a reformed Nazarine *, who is of course an Enemy to the Jesuits, has said upon this Subject. “ Christianity “ seems more effectually settled in China than in “ any of the Countries where the Order hath been “ employed in planting the Faith. The Jesuits “ have had in this Mission many great Men, such “ as the Fathers Riccius, Martinus, Schall, Ver-
C 3 “ bieft,

* Dissertations Historiques & Recherchés sur la Religion Chrétienne dans les Indes, p. 318.

“ bieſt, and very many others. It would be In“ juſtice to reſuſe theſe great Men the Praises “ which are due to them. For my part, I enter “ not at preſent into the Diſputes which ſubſiſt be“ tween them and the other Miſſionaries. It may “ be, that the Jeſuits are not altogether free from “ Blame; but the Conduct of their Adverſaries is “ not however void of Paſſion. Do they not e“ vidently ſhew too great a Pleaſure in mortifying
 “ the Jeſuits on account of the Inſults they pre“ tend to have received from them? ”

This Paſſage ſets in its proper Light the Grounds of thoſe Reproaches thrown out againſt the Jeſuit Miſſionaries. The Hatred which is borne to their Order in Europe, extends itſelf even to thoſe who are employ’d in the Indies in preaching the Unity of God. They reproach ſome with their too great Complaiſance in China; they object to others their Cruelty, and their Loading the Minds of the Indians too ſoon and too heavily with the Belief of Myſteries. Thus they condemn in the firſt what they would have practiſed by the latter, and plainly ſhew, that their Quarrel with the Miſſionaries is a mere Pretence for charging on the Jeſuits all the Evils that fall out in all Places.

I muſt own to you, my Friend, that I have often thought they lay too many things to the Charge of theſe Fathers. There ſcarce falls out any Miſchief but they are reproached with it. I am ſenſible that they are vain, ambitious and revengeful; but I know too, that their Adverſaries are apt to extend things againſt them to extravagancy, and to load them with imaginary Crimes. One Angelinus Ga- zæus, a Jeſuit, hath on this head written ſome Latin Verſes, which expreſs very happily this Folly of attributing whatever falls out amiſs, to that Or-

Order *. The Sense of them is this :

Eve, the Jesuits believed,
They Adam made the Apple eat ;
Abel by Jesuits deceived,
Cain, at their Suit, his Brains out beat.

It were to be wish'd, that Divines had never answered in any other manner than this, to the groundless Reproaches thrown out against them : We should not then have such an enormous Load of Books, full of nothing but Complaints and ill Language. For my part, I cannot comprehend how grave People can spend their Time in writing such Heaps of Invectives ; a quick Pleasantry like this of the Jesuit, renders a false Accusation more evident and more ridiculous than a long pedantick Apology. All the Volumes that have been written against the Jesuits never gave them so much Trouble as the Provincial Letters, where Pascal has continually in mind Horace's Maxim,

..... Ridiculum acri
Fortius & melius magnas plerumque secat res.

If Pascal had refuted the Spanish Divines with all the Pomp of the Schools, the Jesuits had not fail'd, in their Turns, to have sent abroad a Number of Books in defence of their Brethren. They would in this Case have done no more than mutually embarrass the Subject on which they writ ; and after fatiguing themselves and the Publick, with a Multitude

C 4

* The Latin Verses run thus :

Pomum Marito, Jesuitis credulo, Porrexit Eva, Jesuitis credula :
Fratrem Cainus, Jesuitis credulus, Occidet Abel, Jesuitis credulum.

itude of Pieces on the one side, and on the other, which, however, none but themselves or their Friends would have particularly examined; the thing had rested there, and the generality of the World known no more than when they began to write. But the Thing stands now in quite a contrary State; the ingenious, but malicious Method taken by Pascal, hath in six Months time made that evident to all Europe, of which all its Universities could not convince the Publick in a hundred Years.

Take care of your self, my Friend, live happy and contented, and may our God bestow on you great and lasting Prosperity.

Hamburg.

L E T T E R CXXV.

AARON MONCECA, to JACOB BRITO.

YOur Letters upon the Spanish Nation, my dear Brito, gave me infinite Pleasure, and I wish from my Heart, that those which I write you, may prove as useful and as agreeable. I concur with you in your Reflections; they are sensible and just. One only appears to me contrary to the Law of Nature, and contrary to that Equality which a Philosopher allows to all Mankind. You censure a Custom which the Nazarene Pontiffs approved in a certain Assembly *, and which allows a Man, in whatsoever State born, Freedom of Choice in a Wife.

* Council of Trent.

Wife. You say, that such a Permission as this, is contrary to paternal Authority, destructive of that Order which ought to be observed in all States, and of the Subordination which ought to subsist in all Places, for the Good of Society. I must own to you, that in this I am not at all of your mind, but on the contrary, admire the Wisdom and Prudence of these Nazarenes, who, conscious that all Men were the Children of one Father, did not think proper to authorize those chimerical Distinctions, which, in process of time, Pride, Sin, and Vanity have introduced. Besides, what is it to the Good of the State, whether a particular Person be a little more, or a little less rich, provided these Riches remain in the Society? Nay, to speak the truth, the more equally they are parted, so much the more will Trade flourish. Equality among Citizens is the very Basis of Commerce. In such States as have a Nobility aggrandiz'd by extraordinary Privileges, Trade is more cramp'd than in others. In order to prove this Fact, we need but compare the Riches of particular Persons amongst the Dutch and English with the French and Germans. This will be sufficient to shew us what mighty Benefits a People reap by cherishing this Equality, and by refusing to introduce those Distinctions which break the Harmony of Society, and by exalting the Spirits of particular Persons, mortify at the same time others, so as to deprive them of that Quickness, Boldness and Penetration which is necessary to render them successful in Trade.

I can by no means think, that Custom which prevails among the French, the Right of dissolving those Marriages which they are pleased to stile unequal, and thereby separating two Persons whom Love has united, and who, in the Presence of the Deity, have sworn eternal Tenderneſs to each other.

This is a Species of Tyranny which is a Remnant of those too exalted Privileges which the Romans extended heretofore to the Fathers of Families. These Laws in favour of paternal Authority have drawn along with them great Inconveniencies, and by giving to the Heads of Houses an absolute Ascendance over their Families, have exposed many reasonable Beings to the Caprice of one. In vain the old Roman Lawyers set up the Tenderness of Fathers, as an Excuse for vesting in them this extravagant Power. Fathers, as well as their Children, are subject to all the Passions, and all the Frailties of human Nature. How often do we see them hate their Children without Reason, and foolishly dissipate the Estates which they ought to leave to them? How often do we see them sacrifice their Families to their Ambition? And how frequently may we discern in their Opposition to their Families in a certain Way, a secret Jealousy lest their Children should be happier than themselves?

I believe, my Friend, that the Duties between Parents and Children are reciprocal. This is the Sentiment of a French Poet *. Let me cite a couple of Verses which he puts into the Mouth of a distressed Son.

O cruel Parents! Are not your Rights ours?
 'The Ties of Duty, are not they too yours?
 'Thesethen shou'd bind, or those shou'd sure be void;
 Both must subsist, or both must be destroy'd.

The Romans discovered in the End how detrimental to Society this too great Extent of paternal Authority really proved; in consequence of this, they reduced it into narrower Bounds, and took away the Power over Life and Death. Alas! how great

* Crebillon, in his Tragedy of Radamistus and Zenobia.

great the Folly, to permit so long that a whole Family should be abandon'd to the Will of a single Man, who too frequently made an ill Use of his Power?

In order to have a proper Idea of this wrong Use which Parents may make of a Right over the Lives of their Offspring, we need only re-call to our Memory that Custom which prevail'd over the Greeks, of exposing their Children. Where, in this Case, was that paternal Tendernefs so boasted of by the Lawyers? What Strefs can be laid on a Disposition which we see may be so far dispensed with as to sacrifice the Life of a poor Child, purely to gratify Avarice or Ambition, by affording a larger Portion to a Child already brought up? Do we not at this Day see among the Nazarenes many Examples of the Harshness of Parents? How many hapless Daughters are sacrificed in order to enrich an eldest Son? They are without Pity condemned to perpetual Imprisonment, and under the specious Appellation of Nun, languish in Captivity during Life. Are not these, my Friend, most sensible Marks of paternal Tendernefs? Can you, after this, think that the natural Affection of Men is a proper Foundation for Law, or that any Dependance can be had on that innate Tendernefs which some Declaimers have magnified with all the Pomp of Eloquence.

I am confident, my dear Jacob, that a Law which should place Children intirely in the power of their Fathers, would at least be as unreasonable as a Law which gave Children a Power over their Fathers. In a well-regulated State, the Power of the one, and the Obedience of the other, ought to be fixed. Even the most necessary Laws ought to have Limits. I am convinced that the Head of a Family ought to have all the Authority necessary to inspire with Virtue, and to regulate the Manners of his Descendants. But I can by no means agree, that if he should forget to be a Father, he should still retain a Power of punishing a Number of innocent Persons, to whom he imputes no Crime, but the natural Desire of freeing themselves from an insupportable Yoke.

inspire

When one considers attentively the Reasons which generally induce Parents to cross the Inclinations of their Children in Marriage, one discovers their Source either in Caprice or in Ambition. I have shewn you, my Friend, that it is not just to subject many to the Fancy of one. I believe I have also offered you Reasons sufficient, to prove that Equality amongst Citizens contributes to the Good of Society. If to these, you will add the Reflections of a Philosopher, who not content with regarding all Mankind as Equals, sets a greater Price on the Satisfaction of the Mind than on all the Treasures of the Universe. All these things, I say, considered, I flatter my self you will not persist in censuring that Decision of the Nazarene Pontiffs, which solemnly declares, that Men have no Right to invalidate such Marriages as are contracted with the free Consent of both Parties.

Marriages founded in Affection are the most happy. Love, says an English Author *, ought to have shot its Roots deep, and to have been well grown before we enter into that State. There is nothing which more nearly concerns the Peace of Mankind than the having a thorough Knowledge of those with whom they converse. If this be so, how strong a Reason is it for a Husband, being well acquainted with the Qualities of a Woman with whom he is to pass the rest of his Days? It is on his Choice in this respect, that his Happiness or Misery for Life depends.

The Spectator.

pend. One may say of Marriage what Virgil said of Hell;

With mighty ease, we downwards find the Way
To Hell; the Gates are open Night and Day:

But oh! how hard and difficult to tread
The Paths to heav'nly Light which upward lead?

But when once we are in, there is no Remedy left but Patience. How well ought we to examine an Action which hath such important Consequences, and how evidently unjust to deprive a Man of his Liberty in respect to a Thing which so nearly concerns him? When the Choice of a Husband or Wife is left to Parents, they have nothing in view but the Blessings and Advantages of this World; whereas the Persons who are themselves interested regard mostly personal Merit. The first would procure all the Ease and Pleasures of Life for the Person whose Interest they espouse, in hopes that in all Situations these Advantages may be serviceable to them. The latter fix their Thoughts on a continual Bliss.

You see, my Friend, the different Sentiments whereon the Fathers of Families and their Children act. I leave you to judge which is most reasonable. To me it appears, that Satisfaction of Mind is of more Value than the Empire of the Universe, with respect to a Person who desires to live happy and at Ease. The Turks have a much wiser Maxim in this respect than the French. They permit their Children to chuse, if they think fit, from among their Slaves; they regard not in their Alliances either Riches or Ambition, when Love stands in the Way. The Jews, on the contrary, resemble the Nazarenes, who reject the Decision of their Pontiffs; they even go farther, for they settle the Fate of their Children in their Infancy. They contract them before before they are at Years of Discretion ; and I confess, I know not how it comes to pass, that our Brethren are not more unlucky in their Marriages than we generally observe them to be.

A Father, who forms a Project of marrying his Son on the mere Score of Interest, can he possibly know any thing of the Humour or Character of her he designs for his Daughter-in-law, when perhaps he is scarce acquainted with her Person? In truth, my Friend, I cannot but blame these sort of Bargains, believing that Affection, Tenderneſs and Sympathy are the proper Bands which tie in Marriage.

I observe in France, and in many other Countries, that a Peasant is much happier than a Man of superior Rank ; because the former may dispose of his Heart as he pleases ; but the latter being a Slave to Birth, must on that account stifle his Affection. The Examination of her Dignity must precede all respect for her good Qualities in the Woman to whom he inclines ; and it must be his first Care not to derogate from his Nobility, in finding any thing amiable in a Person beneath him. So many Precautions must render a Man miserable. It is natural to avoid Constraint ; and therefore I have no Idea of an imaginary Advantage which deprives me of real ones.

Great Men have always elevated themselves on this head above the Vulgar of their Rank. When they have found themselves invaded by the Power of Love, they have not fail'd to marry as their Passion directed. They have never thought themselves obliged to stoop to ridiculous Customs ; but have raised to an Equality with themselves, such as Love told them were worthy of that Elevation. One of the first Monarchs of the World *, distinguish'd alike

* Peter Alexowitz, Czar of Moscow.

alike by the Extensiveness of his Genius and his Dominions, gave a Place on his Throne to a Woman of the meanest Birth. His Glory was far from suffering any Diminution thereby; the World having admired his Capacity as a Prince, contemplated his Conduct with Pleasure, as the Head of his Family, and found nothing inconsistent with that Grandeur he stood possessed of, considered in one Light, and the Tenderneſs with which he had acted in the other.

I have inſiſted long enough, dear Brito, on this Subject; I would by no means force you to adopt my Sentiments, if you judge them unreaſonable, but if what I have ſaid appears well founded, then I ſhall imagine I have not done amiſs in arguing againſt your Opinion. Till then I ſhall remain in a kind of Uncertainty. For tho' I can by no means approve placing a boundleſs Authority in Parents, yet I ſhall be very diffident as to my own Judgment, if I find that a Perſon endowed with ſo much Wit and good Senſe as you are, inclines to an oppoſite Way of thinking. There are none but Pedants, and the Roman Pontiffs, who pretend to Infallibility. Philoſophers and Men of Senſe are always afraid of falling into Errors. They are too well acquainted with the Weakneſs of human Underſtanding not to be apprehenſive of tripping ſometimes in ſpight of all their Care. Many have puſh'd their Modeſty too far, and have run into a kind of Pyrrhonism to expreſs their Humility. I cannot help thinking it a little extraordinary, that Socrates ſhould ſay after thirty Years Study, That he knew only one thing, which was, that he knew nothing *. Methinks it was a long time to meditate, in order to be the Author at laſt of ſuch a Saying.

May

* Id unum ſcio, quod nihil ſcio.

May you, dear Brito, live always contented and satisfied.

Hamburg.

L E T T E R CXXVI.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
CECA.

THE Letter, my dear Monceca, which you wrote me on the different Sects of the Nazarenes, hath inclined me to reflect a little on those which formerly divided the Religion of our Ancestors. It seems to me that there is no Religion, which once thoroughly established, does not, at the same time that it shoots its Roots downwards, demonstrate its Strength also, by striking out its Branches upwards. In the Beginning these Sects are but a kind of Sprigs or Suckers; by degrees they swell, and at length acquire a Bigness proportionable to the Trunk from whence they sprung. As they grow and gather Strength, they digress farther and farther from the Doctrines of their Mother Church. The chief of each Sect forms his System but by little and little, and his Disciples again add many things thereto.

It is always gradually, and step by step that Innovators condemn the received Religion. If they at once meddled with Fundamentals, they would fright rather than persuade People. There is a Necessity of preparing them by smaller Alterations, for the Reception of Novelties of a larger Size.

The

The Sadducees at their first Appearance, went no further than the Caraites of our Days. They contented themselves with rejecting the Traditions of the Ancients, and stuck close to the written Law. The Pharisees, a sort of Folks as fond heretofore of Chimæras as my quondam Brethren the Rabbins are at this Day, and zealous Maintainers of a thousand ridiculous Traditions, were directly opposite to the Sadducees. However, thus far the latter were in the right, and admitted nothing but what was reasonable. But quickly after, the Love of Novelty, and the Pleasure of straying in Paths far from those of their Adversaries, drew them into unsustainable Notions. Of Caraites they became Infidels and Blasphemers, and thereby gave their Enemies the Pharisees as great Advantages over them as they themselves were possessed of in the Beginning. They deny'd the Resurrection of the Body and the Existence of Angels; they maintained, that the Soul was mortal, and that there was no spiritual Being but God alone *. By this pernicious System, they opened a Door to all Sorts of Crimes, the Fear of Punishments, and the Hope of Rewards hereafter, being the Ties by which common People are bound to Virtue. It is true they did acknowledge God created the Universe, and that he governed it by his Providence; but then they were of Opinion, that he neither punishes nor rewards, save in this World only.

Let me intreat you, my Friend, to examine the several Sects now subsisting among the Nazarenes, and you will find them come very near in their Sentiments to those which were formerly among the Jews. The Sadducees in Judea were what the Deists now are at Paris, of whom you have written me me so much formerly in your Letters, and their Belief, as you must observe, nearly the same *. I would not however, push this Parallel too far, because I know that the true Deists, that is to say, such as have a proper Veneration for the Divinity, do not reject the Doctrine of a future State †.

* Joseph. Antiquitat. lib. xviii. cap. 2. & de Bello Judaico, lib. vi. cap. 12.

But let us pursue this Parallel between the Jewish and Nazarene Sects. That of the Pharisees still subsists, and is indeed become the Standard of Belief among the modern Jews, if we except my Brethren the Caraites, and a few Samaritans; for I look upon all such as profess themselves Votaries to the Talmud, and the Traditions of the Rabbins as Descendants of the Pharisees. From the Destruction of the Temple this Sect hath swallowed up all the others. The Jews in general have unhappily received all its Reveries; so that a thousand ridiculous Chimæras, under the Name of Traditions, have in a manner annull'd the Holy Scriptures.

I sigh, dear Monceca, in the Bitterness of Soul, when I consider, that except a small Number of Caraites, all our Nation have embraced the grossest Errors. Their Religion, as it now stands, is an Edifice built entirely on the Traditions of the Pharisees, and not at all on the Books of the Law. You are well enough acquainted with the Fierceness and Pride of those ancient Doctors. They look'd upon themselves as infinitely more holy than other People, and on this account separated themselves from those whom they stiled Sinners or profane Persons, with whom they would not so much as eat or drink. It was from hence that they derived their Name of Pharisees, which, as you know, comes from the word Pharos, which signifies to separate. They carried, however, their Point by their Hypocrisy pocrify in deceiving the People, who are generally the Dupes of such as put on an exterior Shew of Sanctity.

* Tom. i. Let. 4.

† See the Writings of the Baron of Cherbury.

I find, my dear Monceca, a mighty strong Resemblance between the old Pharisees and the modern Jansenists, as you paint them out. These last pique themselves exactly like the first on their great Austerity, and endeavour to distinguish themselves by extraordinary, shall I call them, or their odd Actions. They have the same Veneration for their Austin, that the Pharisees have for their Traditions, or their Successors the Rabbins have at this day for the Talmud. They are Cheats, Hypocrites, Impostors, and know perfectly well, especially the Women amongst them, how to deceive the Populace by a fair Outside. They make a mighty Parade of the Severity of their Morals, which hinders not, however, their supposing the Epines, the Hemorrhoides, She-Saints, and the Abbé Paris a He-One. In one word, I find them but too like the Pharisees.

The Essenes, who among the ancient Jews were perhaps the only true Observers of the Law, had Opinions very different from those of the other Sects. They led a Life far more rigid, but at the same time far more sage than any of their Countrymen, but notwithstanding this there was not a Spice of Hypocrisy in their Conduct. They were Men truly virtuous, whose Moderation and Self-denial must appear exemplary, even in the Eyes of Philosophers. It is true they ran into some very odd Doctrines. They admitted absolute Predestination, looked upon Man as a Slave, deny'd his Free-will, and left him no Liberty in his Actions. They differed also from the Pharisees about the great Articles of a future State and the Resurrection of the Dead. For tho' they believed the former, they deny'd the latter, maintaining, that Souls when they left their Bodies, entered entered instantly into a State of Immortality, remaining eternally happy or eternally miserable, according to their Actions here, without ever being joined again to their own, or to any other Bodies *.

There are many Nazarenes, who maintain at this Day the last mentioned Opinions of the Essenes, and who believe there is no Purgatory, notwithstanding what is said on that Subject by other Nazarenes. They say, that when the Soul escapes from the Captivity it suffers in the Body, it enters into a State of eternal Happiness or eternal Misery. There are not a few who admit absolute Predestination; and in short, all who are call'd reformed throughout Europe, resemble in many respects the Essenes.

There was yet another Sect among the Jews, who were stiled the Contemplative or Therapeutæ †. Those who embraced their Opinions, said, that it was a Motion of the divine Love which threw them into a sort of Enthusiasm, not unlike that of the Bacchantes and the Corybantes, in their Celebration of their Mysteries among the ancient Pagans. This fit lasted till they fell into a kind of Contemplation, during which they were in an Ecstasy. Thenceforward, they looked upon themselves as raised above other Men. These People often retired into Desarts, leaving their Relations and Friends, in order to deliver themselves up entirely to seraphick Joys.

It is easy to find these Therapeutæ among the Mystics of our Days. The Monks, who leave the World and retire into Desarts, that they may have nothing to disturb them in their Contemplation, resemble them strongly. The Fanaticks, or the Enlightned, as they call themselves, are also of this Cast.

* Prideaux's Connection.

† Philo de vitâ contemplativâ. p. 668. edit. Colon.

Cast. They believe, as those People did, that they have received the Spirit in a supernatural Way; that it entirely possesses them, that they are guided by it in all things, and consequently justified by it.

You see, dear Monceca, that I had Reason to maintain there was scarce a Nazarene Sect, in which might not be discovered somewhat of the Leaven of some one of those which anciently prevailed among the Jews. In this manner, the Opinions of Men succeed each other. After being proscribed for a certain Space of time, they again revive, and find again new Partizans.

There was in Judea, a little before the Destruction of that Kingdom, a certain Sect who called themselves Herodians, and who took rise from Herod the Great. This Sect subsists at this Day in all Courts. The Errors of these consists in following blindly the Will of their Prince, and in thinking that Party always in the right which has a superior Force on its Side. Herod followed this Principle in his own Practice. Josephus *, a celebrated Historian of our Nation, tho' too much despised by us, informs us, that this Prince, to make his Court to the Romans, did many things which were not only forbidden by, but were directly contrary to the Spirit of our Laws. Nay, he digressed so far from the right Road, as to build Temples and to erect Statues for Idolatrous Worship, which abominable Crimes he excused by the Obligation he lay under of keeping on good Terms with the Romans. His Followers adopted his Maxims; and the Courtiers, those eternal Idolaters of a Monarch's Favour, were almost to a Man of this Sect; which was thoroughly despised by the more virtuous Jews, and is even now held in Abomination, notwithstanding the Distance of Time, by all such as have a true Sense of Religion ; and prefer the Service of God to a vain and fleeting Glory. See, my Friend, how a Nazarene Author has treated these Herodians. “ I believe they were like Herod, but half “ Jews ; Men who made Profession indeed of that “ Religion, but could, upon occasion, accommo- “ date themselves to the Pagan Idolatry, and do “ whatever was demanded of them. The Saddu- “ cees, who believed there was no Life after this, “ ran almost unanimously into that Opinion, in- “ somuch that they came afterwards to be con- “ founded with that Sect *.”

* Joseph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 12.

One may, Monceca, boldly venture to affirm, that the Belief of the Prince determines that of his Courtiers in general, and influences in time that of his People. In effect, it is next to an Impossibility that the Religion of the Sovereign should not in time destroy and absorb the rest. Would it not have been sufficient to have turned all France Protestants if Henry IV. had continued in that Religion ? Had it been so, I am persuaded there would have been fewer Papists in Paris, than there are now of the Reformed. For it is impossible, that in the Course of four or five Generations, there should not in every Family be a Chief, desirous of Honours, Offices, and such like Marks of Distinction. Ambition, in proportion, reigns equally among Great and Small. In order to make a Fortune easily, a Man must be of the Religion of his Prince. This is an excellent Reason in its favour, and an Argument very prevalent with the greatest Part of Mankind.

In order to demonstrate the Truth of this Fact, we need only consider what is become of the Popish Religion in the North, and it will presently convince us, that the Religion of the Prince will absolutely,

* Prideaux's Connection.

lutely, in time, swallow up the rest : If the Successors of Herod had all of them thought as he did, the Jewish Religion would soon have been half extinguish'd. The Pharisees themselves would have gone over to his Sect ; for they had too much Pride and Vanity not to desire a Share in the Royal Favour. Those who express a great deal of Zeal for an Opinion, are not the least likely to change it. I have seen many Nazarenes who have writ with much Heat in defence of a Doctrine which Interest or Honours hath afterwards tempted them to desert ; while ignorant People, and Men of a middling Capacity have suffered with invincible Constancy in defence of their Behaviour. It is not very difficult to gain the Doctors of the Sorbonne, in case it become necessary to establish any new Opinion in France. By the means of Benefices, the Sovereign has in his hand the Keys of the Clergy's Hearts. If the Jansenists could obtain Preferments to the full Extent of their Desires, they would certainly make less Noise than they do. But the Molinists take all, which will never bring both Parties to an Agreement.

May'st thou enjoy, dear Monceca, Health, Wealth and Prosperity.

Cairo.

L E T T E R CXXVII.

JACOB BRITO, to AARON MONCECA.

THE Superstition of the Portuguese, my dear Monceca, puts me in mind of that ancient Severity with which our Forefathers kept the Sabbath. There was a Time when that Superstition was push'd so far, that the Jews, by a false Delicacy of Conscience durst not defend their Lives upon that Day. If they were attack'd, they rather suffer'd themselves to be slain than they would avoid it by Resistance. In the Beginning of the Wars under the Maccabees, the Folly and Inconvenience of this Conduct became manifest by its mischievous Consequences. Men of Sense, who saw clearly that the divine Law could not enjoin any thing apparently destructive of Society, decided, that the fourth Commandment did not forbid the defending of their Lives when they were attack'd, or found themselves in Danger. In thus explaining the Commandment, they certainly came nearer to its true Sense ; but still their Explication wanted Scope. For after all, they imagined that they were only to resist in case of an Attack, and that even this Decision did not give them a Power of impeding any preparative Steps towards the Ruin of the Publick, or Destruction of any private Persons ; but only a Permission to defend themselves at the last Extremity. Thus it fell out, that if the Jews were attack'd upon the Sabbath-day they made a vigorous Resistance ; but if they were besieged in a Town,

Town, they did not think it lawful to hinder the raising of Mounts or of Batteries. They durst not so much as make a Sally in order to drive the Enemy from an advantageous Post, because in this Case they would have been Aggressors; and except in a Point of the last Extremity, they held it a Thing absolutely unlawful to oppose Force by Force.

It was this false Delicacy, in a great Measure, which gave Pompey an Opportunity of taking the Temple. He soon perceiv'd the Nature of the Jewish Discipline, and instead of making Attacks on the Sabbath Days, he employed them entirely in perfecting his Works, in raising Batteries, filling up Ditches and erecting Machines; from which Change of Conduct he found all the good Effects he could desire. His Soldiers did their Business so well and so commodiously, that at length they sapp'd a great Tower, which falling, drew after it a considerable Part of the Wall. The Breach thus made, they mounted and carried the Place by Assault. Thus the Temple was taken and sack'd through the blind Superstition of those who should have defended it.

Whatever our Rabbins may say, my dear Monceca, I shall never be brought to believe, that the Divinity can expect from Men a Compliance with a Law, hurtful or prejudicial to Society. The Light of Nature shews us, that the Deity intends the Happiness of Mankind, and that the Rules he has given us for our Conduct have all that Tendency. We ought therefore to reject in the Celebration of the Sabbath, whatever may render it hurtful; and since from the Time of the Maccabees it has been admitted, that Resistance in Cases of extreme Necessity is lawful, we ought likewise to conclude, that we are permitted to do any thing which may be needful on that Day to prevent the Snares laid by our Enemies from taking Effect.

The Nazarenes act, in this respect, more wisely than the Jews. They have their Sabbath Day as well as we, but they don't observe that Day in such a Manner as to render it hurtful. They do not apprehend that the Service of God obliges them to permit, by a blameable Indolence, the Destruction of his Temple and Altars. The Nazarenes say likewise, that in certain Laws the Letter kills, but the Spirit giveth Life; and that they are always to be explain'd in such a rational manner, as that the Divine Commands may coincide with the Measures requisite for the publick Good. Necessity may dispense with many things. It were to be wish'd that our Ancestors had thought as reasonably on the Head of the Sabbath, as our Brethren do in the Country where I live. They are not circumcised, they eat Pork, go to the Nazarene Churches, sing Vespers, and if it be necessary, say Mass; yet remain nevertheless good Jews in their Hearts. Of what Use would a false and foolish Zeal be, which would serve only to ruin entirely the Remains of our unfortunate Nation in these Parts? I heartily disapprove a fierce and haughty Behaviour on certain Occasions. It is more allowable to be a little negligent, or even to be wanting to our Duty with respect to one Precept, than to hazard an Inability of fulfilling the rest.

It is not because I have not a proper Admiration of that Constancy which appeared in the Behaviour of our Ancestors that I reason thus; I own I am struck with it: But what then? I cannot approve of it. What Mortal Man but must be astonished; when he considers their Firmness? Josephus and other Historians have preserved a full Account thereof, and transmitted it to Posterity. The Nazarene Authors do them all imaginable Justice. See how an English Writer speaks of the Conduct of our Forefathers at the time Pompey sack'd the Temple. "During all this Distress, says he, amidst the Cries and the Disorders naturally attending these Barbarities, the Priests still continued in the Temple, and still discharged the Duties of their Functions; they persisted in them with wonderful Calmness and Steadiness of Mind, notwithstanding the Rage of their Enemies, and notwithstanding the Anguish of Soul they must feel at seeing their Relations and Friends die before their Eyes, chusing to fall by the Swords of their Enemies, who were now Masters of all, rather than abandon the Service of their God. Many of them went to mingle their Blood with that of the Sacrifices which they offered, and by the Sword of the Heathens became Victims to their Duty. Pompey himself could not help admiring this Firmness, this Constancy, to which scarce any Parallel can be found *."

Whatever Contempt other Nations may have for ours, I believe, I may affirm, my Friend, without Breach of Truth, that never any People gave more convincing Marks of Bravery than we have done in fighting against our Enemies, or have shewn greater Veneration for the Deity. It is true that we have sometimes fail'd; but who are they to whom the same Objection may not be made? For a Nation never to be deficient in any Point of Duty, we must suppose it composed of Men void of human Frailty. Where are they to be met with who have resisted such Persecutions as we have felt, without sinking under the Weight of their Misfortunes? We however remain uncrush'd. We have sustain'd with a Patience worthy of the greatest Admiration, all the Punishments that have been inflicted upon us. We are, as it were, Vagabonds throughout the Earth, proscribed in many Parts of the World, and forced to pay for the very Air we breathe, in Places which afford us a Retreat : Evils, capable of destroying even the Constancy of a Stoick. Yet in the midst of these Distresses, scarce one in an Age can be found amongst us who abandons his Belief and proves a Traitor to his God.

The Nazarenes, who blame without distinction all our Actions, even such as deserve the highest Commendation, give the Name of Wrongheadedness to our Constancy, instead of doing Justice to our Firmness. Their Hatred towards us, makes them so blind that they make Crimes even of our Virtues. I should be glad if they would inform me, how that which in themselves they stile Grandeur of Soul and Fidelity to Providence, comes to be in us Obstinacy and Hardness of Heart ? Inasmuch as we are thoroughly persuaded of the Truth of our Religion, and believe as firmly as they do, why are we more wrongheaded than they ? Obstinacy is that Vice which engages a Man to defend his Opinion, even after he is convinced of its Falseness. But there can be nothing more unworthy of an honest Man than to change his Sentiments in religious Matters, purely out of Complaisance. It is becoming like certain Idolaters in the Indies, who make a Trade of their Religion in their Negotiations with the Nazarene Missionaries ; they abandon the Worship of their Idols while the Fathers furnish them with a better Subsistence than otherwise they could obtain ; but whenever they are turn'd out of their Pay, away they run to their Woods, and to their false Gods again.

Consider, my dear Monceca, the several Sects of the Nazarenes, which have sprung up in the Space of seventeen hundred Years, they are almost all extinct.

ting. One Age hath seen a Religion rise and fall, which yet in its Day had a Multitude of Partizans. In this springing and decaying of Religions, ours hath suffered no Diminution. I am persuaded there are at this Day as many Jews scattered over the Earth as there were in the World at the time of the last Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. It seems that Heaven is alike employ'd in multiplying them and their Misfortunes. If all the Jews who are in the Countries of the Great Mogul, in Moscow, in Turky, in Africa, and in the several Kingdoms of Europe, were assembled in one Country, I doubt whether there would be a more numerous or a more puissant Nation in the Earth. This shall one Day happen, dear Monceca, when the long Captivity under which we now languish, shall have its final Period. The Walls of Jerusalem shall be rebuilt by her Children, the Holy Temple again restored, and the Almighty worshipped therein by his faithful Israelites, in the same manner as heretofore. Let the Nazarenes then go on to boast their own Prosperity, and to upbraid us with our Misfortunes. He who hath brought us into this Slavery, and hath made us stoop to the Yoke of these Nations, can deliver us when he pleases, and when our Crimes shall be expiated, then the Nazarenes shall begin to feel the Punishment of theirs.

We may apply to our Enemies what an English Governor once said to a French General when England was deprived of Calais, the last of the numerous Conquests it had made in France. The General ask'd the Governor pleasantly, When do you think you shall pass the Water, and establish yourselves again here? That we shall do, replied the Governor gravely, whenever your Sins are greater than ours. If this Gentleman was right in his Conjecture, then towards the latter End of the Reign of Lewis XIV.

the French were greater Sinners than the Engliſh. It is true that Heaven at laſt pardon'd them, and their Enemies quickly paſſ'd the Sea again. It ſhall be, dear Monceca, with the Jews as with the Nazarenes ; whenever they become virtuous, God will put an end to their Sufferings. All the different Captivities that we have endured are but the Effects of our Vices, and as theſe have not produced an Amendment, God hath thought fit to continue our Afflictions, that he may change intirely our evil Inclinations, and render us worthy of being call'd by his Name. The longer our Slavery laſts, the more agreeable its End will be. In vain have the Nations conſpired the Ruin of Iſrael ; their Projects ſhall be all diſappointed ; the Almighty ſhall diſſipate their dark Contrivances as the Wind drives Smoke away. When our Deliverer ſhall come to break our Chains, the Earth ſhall tremble at his Preſence, and Kings ſhall fall down at his Feet ; he ſhall overcome all Obſtacles, and Sion ſhall be reſtored, and become more flouriſhing than of old. Happy ! Happy ! Monceca, ſhall the Jews be who ſhall then enjoy the Light of the Sun ; they ſhall ſee in one Day more Miracles done than have been hitherto wrought from the Creation of the World. They ſhall contemplate the Face of the moſt awful Meſſiah, reſplendent with Glory. Perhaps that Day is nearer than we imagine. The Deliverer of Iſrael may appear in an Inſtant ; it is alſo poſſible that happy Moment may be far off. God alone knows when it ſhall come to paſs. Let us ſubmit with all due reſpect to his Decrees. Let us adore his holy Providence, and let us be aſſured, that if he puniſhes us it is for our Good, and that in the End he may bring us to Glory.

May'ſt thou enjoy thy Health, dear Monceca, live

live happily and content, and may the God of our Fathers grant thee Prosperity in all things.

Lisbon.

L E T T E R CXXVIII.

AARON MONCECA, to JACOB BRITO.

I HAVE many times considered what it was, which could render some Nations so much more affable than others. I am at length persuaded, that it is simply Education; and that it is purely the Instructions we give Children in their tender Years, which determines their future Temperament, and inspires them with that Politeness which is of so great consequence to Society.

Some Authors, moderately furnish'd with Understanding, have maintain'd, that those are the most polish'd who dwell in Countries subject to absolute Monarchs*. If we may credit these Men, Brutality is a kind of necessary Consequence of Liberty. They compare the Politeness of the French with that Quickness and Haughtiness visible in the English, and that plain natural Behaviour, which is the Characteristick of the Dutch and Swiss. But the Examples these Authors make use of, in order to sustain their Opinions, are absolutely destroy'd by others; which very plainly prove, that the Liberty of a Nation does not at all prejudice Affability, or Complaisance. The Greeks and Romans, while their several Republicks were

D 4

in

* See, amongst other things, Lettres sur les Hollandois, said to be written by Mr. Muralt.

in the greatest Splendor, were the People in the World the most civilized, the most polite; while the Persians and the Parthians, Slaves to absolute Princes, were considered as Barbarians.

If we compare the Affability of the Venetians with the unmannerly Behaviour of the Turks, we shall readily agree, that despotick Government is far enough from inspiring Politeness; we must look therefore for this Cause somewhere else, than in either Submission or Liberty. For as we see, that some free People have little Complaisance, and that under despotick Governments there may be found some who have less; and as it is certain, that the Muscovites were heretofore the most restive and the most brutal of all People, at the very time that they were absolutely Slaves; we must acknowledge that the Idea we are apt to form of a Ferocity arising from a Spirit of Liberty, is not at all founded in Reason, but in Prejudice: wherefore we ought to continue our Search.

I think, and that with reason, dear Brito, that Education is the ruling Motive in most of the Actions of Mankind; they have been more or less tractable, according as they have been more or less cultivated in their Youth. When they have been taught early to render themselves sociable, to bend their Tempers, and to accommodate their Wills to those of others, it grows into a Custom, and they become insensibly complaisant without thinking of being so. In short, Habit is to them a second Nature. But, when on the contrary, they are brought up in a full Gratification of their Passions, and allowed to follow blindly their own Humours, their Temper becomes more and more restive, and they grow the more and more impertinent as they grow in Years; the Nature of the Government they

they live under, neither abating nor encreasing the Rusticity of their Manners.

The Muscovites are not become more submissive within these twenty Years, and they are become more polite. Peter Alexowitz found the Secret of polishing their Manners and abolishing their ill Customs, without making them Slaves. He made them more sociable; by obliging them to educate their Children in a proper manner. The Muscovite Court differs as much from what it was twenty Years ago, as the Court of France differs from that of Constantinople; and yet I look upon these Courts as Antipodes to each other in this respect.

The Muscovites were heretofore less polish'd and less affable than the Turks, absolutely ignorant of the Laws of Civility, and very moderately skill'd in those of Nations. The Character of Ambassador was scarce enough considered amongst them to preserve him who bore it from Indignities. Wicquefort, in his Treatise of the Ambassador and his Functions, speaks of them in these terms:

“ The Muscovites are void of good Manners, “ barbarous and brutal; and tho' Birth makes “ some distinction between the better and the “ meanest Sort of them, yet are they all Slaves
 “ to the Czar, and through a base and servile E“ ducation one sees nothing amongst them, which “ is not low, stupid and clownish. The Czar,
 “ or Grand Duke, takes upon himself the Expen-“ ces of all Ambassadors, as soon as they enter
 “ his Dominions, and continues to defray them so “ long as they remain in them; but then this “ Kindness, Honour, or whatever you will call it, “ is accompany'd with a kind of beastly
 “ Arrogance. For, whereas in all other Courts
 “ the Master of the Ceremonies, or Intro“ ductor of Ambassadors, does all Civilities

“to publick Ministers, and gives them the Place “of Honour in their Houses, in the Name of “his Master; the Muscovite Pristave does his ut“most to make himself Master of that Place, “avoids lighting from his Horse till the Minister “is actually dismounted, throws himself first “into a Coach or into a Sledge; and, in short, “behaves with the utmost Sauciness upon all oc“casions. There are several Descriptions of this “Court, and its Formalities. Amongst others, a “most impertinent one in the Account of the “Embassy sent by the Duke of Holstein Gottorp “thither, and into Persia in the Year 1633.
 “But I do not remember any, in which this “Nation is set in a better light, than in that “which we have of the Earl of Carlisle, who “went thither on the part of the King of Great “Britain, in the same Year.

“The Pristave, who received him at Archangel, “took the hand of the Ambassador, and would “not yield up that Point, till the Governor of “the Town directed him to comply with the “Earl’s Desire; who was a Man of Spirit, and “would not suffer any Injury to be done to the “King his Master. They fixed the Day on “which he was to make his Entry into Moscow.
 “He was on horseback, and after he had rode “above half a League, they told him it must be “put-off until the next Day, and obliged him to “take up his Lodgings in a pitiful Village. The “Ambassador shewed not a little Resentment, he “even wrote to the Czar upon it in very strong “terms: But this signified nothing, they gave “him no Satisfaction, either on this Account, or “on the Errand on which he came. Nay, on a “certain Occasion in which they ought to have “done him the highest Honours, they took an “oppor-

“ opportunity to offer him the most outrageous “ Insult. The Czar invited him to Dinner, but “ caused him to be placed at a separate Table, at “ a greater distance from his own than that at “ which his Bojars sate, who are in fact his Slaves, “ who were placed on the right hand, while the “ Ambassador sate on the left. At length he “ took his leave, so little satisfy’d with the Court,
 “ that he refused the Presents which were offered “ him, and express’d his Resentment in such “ terms, that the Czar sent an express Embassy
 “ to complain of him to the King his Master*.”

Tho’ this Passage is somewhat long, yet am I persuaded, my dear Brito, you will not find it tedious. It proves indubitably, that the most submissive People in the World, may be at the same time exceeding brutal; and it gives us likewise a very just Idea of the Manners and Customs of the Muscovites. It is true, that within these few Years great Changes have been made amongst them; but after all, there are many things in their Manners that want Correction, and to Time it must be left to compleat what Peter Alexowitz has begun. After all, to him will be owing the total Change of a People so savage and so defective in point of Civility.

I have been inform’d by the Chevalier Maisin, when I was at Paris, that he went often to the Inn at Toulon, where the young Muscovites boarded, whom the Czar sent thither to learn the Arts of Navigation and Ship-building; they served at that time in the Marines. When they first came to that Place, there was hardly a Day past over their heads but they boxed, and were sometimes ready to draw their Knives about who should have the first

* Wicquefort de l’Ambassadeur, lib. i. §. xviii.
 p. 476.

first Cut of the Meat. They look'd more like Bears Whelps half lick'd, than Men. However, by degrees they lost all their ill Habits, and returned into their own Countries as polished and as well bred, as if they had been born in the heart of Europe.

The Strangers who have gone over into Muscovy, have done infinite Service in that Country. Besides propagating the Arts, they have shewn the People the Absurdity of their old Customs. I look upon the French and Germans settled there, as so many Missionaries employed in teaching them Humanity ; and who do infinitely greater Service, than those do who run to the East and West-Indies, merely to extend the Power of the Pope. The first Duty of Men, next to that of worshipping the Deity, is ministring to the Wants of their Fellow-Creatures. He must have very little Charity in his Nature, who does not rejoice at hearing of a whole Nation being brought to their Senses. Tho' I am a Jew, I take part in the good Fortune of Mankind ; and when I understand, that a Man travels to augment it ; I look upon him as an Hero. The World is the Country of a Philosopher, he ought to be ashamed of that mean and base Jealousy, which constitutes what is called National Prejudice. I wish with all my heart, that the Swiss Frankness, the good Sense of the Dutch, French Wit, and English Penetration, were diffused through the whole human Species ; they would not indeed after all this be Jews, but they would be worthy of becoming such, and I should willingly acknowledge them my Brethren. You see, my dear Brito, my Sentiments, with respect to the Mass of Mankind. I don't know whether you will approve them ; but I fancy you are so much above all Prejudice, that you cannot but love Virtue wherever it appears.
are

I go from hence the first of next Month, in order to pass some time in England. I have already written to Jeremy Costa, to hire for me an Apartment in some quiet Part of the City. It has been always my care throughout my Travels, to lodge in Places where, when I thought proper, I might indulge Meditation, without Danger of being disturbed. In all great Cities, and especially in Paris and London, a Man who applies himself to Study, ought to be as careful in his Choice of a Lodging, as a Man about to marry is in that of his Wife; and for the same reason, his Tranquility depending on his Choice. It is true, that in France or in England, one may easier change one's House than one's Wife; but after all, when one is once fixed, removing is very troublesome.

I must acknowledge to you, my Friend, that Change is troublesome to me in all things. I maintain a perfect Uniformity in my Conduct, and my Manner of Life is entirely opposite to that of some other Persons, who pass their days in a sort of continued Agitation. I have often pitied at Paris a Number of French People who were everlastingly in a hurry, and who seemed to me as uneasy as if they had been in a Place besieged.

To say the Truth, an Itch of Change, and a Passion for Novelty, are not unlike Possessions; I mean those, which the Vulgar apprehend come from the Devil. There are more philosophical Reasonings necessary to cure a Brain thus turned, than Drops of holy Water to a Nazarene Priest, who would drive Ashtaroth or Belial out of a Body, in which they lay in Garison. After all, it frequently happens, that philosophical Arguments do no more good in one case, than ecclesiastical Ceremonies remonies in the other ; so that both Maladies remain incurable. This Case is common at Paris, where one half of the Smarts are as thoroughly fix'd to their Follies, as the Convulsionists are to their Diseases. You will be astonish'd, my dear Brito, at seeing me treat these People like Demoniacks ; but to speak sincerely, I don't know what else to call them. What Name can one give to a Sett of People, who commit all Sorts of Extravagances with an air of Mystery. You will say perhaps that if the thing be so, I call those Demoniacks who ought to be called Cheats and Impostors. It may be so: I leave it entirely to you to decide that Question.

May God grant you, dear Brito, Health, Content and Happiness.

Hamburgh.

L E T T E R CXXIX.

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THERE is nothing more disputed, than that Preference which ought to be given to the Memory of sovereign Princes distinguished by their Virtues ; and it seems a thing not yet decided whose Name should stand first in this List. For my part, dear Isaac, I know none so worthy of that Post of Honour, as Henry IV. King of France. All the other Princes, of whom Men talk so much, if they had many good Qualities, have also had many

many bad ones; and there is not one amongst them who has not tarnish'd the Lustre of his Virtues, not only by a light Fault, but by some considerable Excess, incompatible with Humanity and the Character of a Man of Worth. You may not perhaps have reflected thoroughly upon this Subject, I will therefore give you evident Proofs in Support of my Opinion, by running over all the Heroes of Antiquity, glancing also a little on the Moderns.

If we go as high as the fabulous Times and the Siege of Troy, and take upon us to examine the Heroes of Homer, we shall find them a Company of hair-brain'd, proud, cunning, or perjured Persons. Achilles is a head-strong Creature, who suffers half the Greeks to be knock'd o'the Head to no purpose; so great a Brute that he outrages the Corpse of Hector, whose Valour he ought to have honour'd: None but mean and base Minds insult over a vanquish'd Enemy. Agamemnon was the Hangman of his Family, he sacrificed his Daughter to his own Ambition. Ajax is a Madman, Ulysses a Cheat, Telemenes the Murderer of his Son. In short, without doing the least Injury to these ancient Heroes, we may safely say, that the very best of them could not be stiled a Man of Probity.

But, without dwelling upon these times of Fiction, let us look a little into the Conduct of the greatest Monarchs in the Universe. What Crimes did not Alexander the Great commit in the last Years of his Life? What is there gross or abominable, into which he did not run? He butcher'd his Friends with his own hand, he caused his best Captains to be put to death, he gave himself up to Drinking and Debauchery; and many a Man has been broke upon the Wheel, for a less horrid Murder than that of Clytus. I do not know, whether I ought to put Marius and Sylla into the Rank

Rank of Sovereigns; but this I know, that while they were at the Head of the Roman Republick, they committed more Villainies, Robberies and Murders, than were ever perpetrated by the Miquelets in Catalonia, or the Camisars in France.

Pompey and Cæsar were two illustrious Highwaymen, who disputed for a long time which should have the Honour of robbing his Country. Both abused the Powers granted them by the Republick, and whatever pompous Titles their Partizans might give them, it is impossible for us to consider them in any other light than as Destroyers of their Country. The one thought of enslaving it, under the Pretence of defending it; the other pretended a Right to it, in revenge for the Injuries done him.

Antony, Augustus and Lepidus, made the Earth and the Sea blush, by their bloody Proscriptions. I look upon them as three Knights of the Road, who, on the Death of their Captain, shared his Booty among them, and a little after fell to quarrelling amongst themselves. It is true, that Augustus in the latter Part of his Life behaved well: but had he been a private Man he would have been hang'd many a fair Day, before his Penitence appear'd. The Nazarenes have a Proverb, When the Devil grew old, he turn'd Hermit. This was his Character to a hair.

Let us now quit the Heroes of Antiquity, and come to those of later times; among whom, I own we shall find Men of greater Worth; but none of them without their Faults, and those very considerable ones too.

Francis, the first King of France, had a thousand Virtues. He was good, generous, sincere; but with all these good Qualities he was certainly false

to

to his Word, after he was delivered from his Captivity in Spain, and paid for that time the Emperor Charles Vth in the Coin which he had more than once received. That great Emperor, with all his Virtues, could not boast of much Sincerity, and his greatest Admirers must allow this considerable Deficiency.

Times within our Memory have produced four Heroes of different Virtues, all of them endowed with great good Qualities, which each of them sullied by some notable Defects.

The first of these Heroes is William the Third, King of Great-Britain, who had without doubt very shining Properties, which would have appeared however brighter in the eyes of Posterity, and have been more considered by Men of true good Sense, if he had never contributed to the dethroning his Father-in-Law. What does the World say of a Man who lays his Hands on his Father's Goods, and obliges him to run about in a miserable manner, begging his Bread?

Lewis the XIVth, is the second of these Heroes. He was good-natur'd, magnificent, hated Cruelty, loved learned Men, and encouraged the Arts and Sciences, so as to render them flourishing in his Dominions. His Enemies continually objected his exorbitant Ambition; and yet it is not difficult to justify him upon that head, at least to excuse him. He had good Reasons for punishing the Spaniards, who, for a long series of time, had endeavour'd the Destruction of France. If he aggrandized his Kingdom, nothing can be plainer, than that in augmenting his proper Glory, he augmented also the Good of his People. His Ambition and his Conquests therefore, may be well enough approved. In short, he had equal'd Henry IVth, had he never taken the Advice of the Jesuits, suits, or set his Eyes on Madam Montespan. To take a Woman away from her Husband, and to be so far governed by Priests, as to drive out of his Dominions by their Advice People to whom the House of Bourbon had infinite Obligations, render'd it necessary for Lewis the XIVth, to have all the great Qualities he stood possessed of, from preventing his Fame from being utterly destroy'd by those two most remarkable Slips in his Conduct.

I know very well, my dear Isaac, that the Politicians excuse the Banishment of the Reformed, by the Necessity there was of having but one Religion in France, in order to establish its Tranquility on a firm Basis. I must own, that these Reasons have a great deal of weight. However, in exiling the Protestants, there was no necessity of having recourse to as many Murders and Proscriptions, as ever render'd a Triumvirate infamous. I own too, that it is said, that Lewis the XIVth was totally ignorant of all these Cruelties; and that being as he was of a humane Disposition, he would undoubtedly have hinder'd, had he known any thing of the matter. But, granting this, he was still responsible; because he was so weak as to give himself up to the pernicious Counsels of Monks and Devotees.

The Character of the late Czar Peter the First, is, properly speaking, a Mixture of Magnanimity and Cruelty, of Virtues and Vices. Let the World say what they will of his Glory, I shall never be brought to believe, that his intractable Fierceness was a Virtue, or that a Father ought to reckon among his illustrious Actions the Death of his Son.

Charles the XIIth of Sweden, had a surprising Courage, and with it a Multitude of other great great Qualities; but he push'd his Revenge to Extremity;

Extremity; and perhaps God himself, by that Chain of Evils which follow'd after the Battle of Pultowa, punish'd in this World his Cruelty towards Patkul, which was the more inexcusable, considering the Character with which he was cloathed.

All these Heroes of whom I have been speaking, and whose Characters I have ventured to examine, must be at least allowed to have tarnished the Lustre of their Virtues, by capital Errors. *Henry IV*th had no Failings, but such as are incident to human Nature. He vanquish'd his Enemies, and as soon as he had done so, he generously forgave them whatever they had done amiss. He conquer'd himself his own Kingdom, and made War only to recover what was justly his Due, and to drive out those Enemies who came to attack him in his own Dominions, and to foment Troubles and Divisions among his Subjects. He was the Father of his People; the Widow and the Orphan always found an Azylum at the Foot of his Throne. He loved Women, but not like Lewis the XIVth. He was in that so good and so perfect, that if in the times of Idolatry, when illustrious Princes were ranked amongst the Gods, he had been there placed, I believe I should have wanted an extraordinary Measure of divine Grace, to hinder me from entering the Temple of Henry IV, and burning Incense on his Altar.

France is at this Day governed by a Prince, who may perhaps one day rival the greatest King of his Race. He has already shewn us Good-Nature, Generosity, Clemency and Discretion, almost beyond comparison; so many good Qualities ought surely to be considered as an earnest, that other Virtues shall appear when Occasion calls them forth.

The Nazarenes have a custom of praying devoutly in their Churches for the Safety of their King. They intreat Providence daily to preserve him and render him prosperous. Who could have imagined, all this considered, that the best King in the World should be assassinated in the midst of his People, to whom he was a common Parent? O strange! O hapless Instance of the Folly and Frenzies of Men! Lewis the XIth met with few Rebels amongst his Subjects. Henry IVth found amongst them Enemies the most cruel.

The best Kings have seldom met with proper Returns from their People. It seems as if Severity was the sole Method whereby Fear and Reverence can be impressed on the Croud; mean and servile Creatures, whom only a rigid and inflexible Administration can govern. The Kindness and Clemency of the present King of France, hath served but to increase the Fierceness of the Molinists, and the Malignity of the Jansenists. Confident of Impunity, they have from time to time committed the most unpardonable Offences.

It is not long since a Prelate, whose Name is *Lefiteau, who had been a Jesuit before his Promotion to that Rank, compos'd a Book, intitled, An Answer to the Anecdotes on the Constitution Unigenitus. In this Piece, in refuting the Sentiments of the Jansenists, he has run into the most outrageous Invectives against Persons the most venerable; and not contented even with this, hath treated very unadvisedly of the Rights and Privileges of the Kingdom. The King was content with simply condemning the Books, forbidding the Sale thereof; and directing that all who were possessed of Copies, should bring them to Persons who were appointed to that end, by an Arret of Council. Without question, question, my Friend, you apprehend that the Prelate, struck with the Kindness and Clemency of his Prince, hath ever since behaved with more Caution. Nothing like it. Some Months after the Condemnation of his Work, he published a Sequel, written in the very same Spirit; this was again condemned by another Arret of Council. Maugre all this, our Prelate is again at work, and will, in all Probability, publish another Volume by way of Continuation to the Anecdotes.

* Bishop of Sisleron.

To say the Truth, dear Isaac, Subjects are sometimes apt to abuse the Good-nature and Compassion of their Princes. There is not, in my Opinion, any Boldness equal to that of some Ecclesiasticks. They will sometimes undertake the most extravagant Things. That Consideration, which they think is due to their Character, gives them Spirit enough to undertake any Thing, insomuch that they execute with Assurance what other People would not so much as suffer to enter into their Heads. One may safely say, my Friend, that in all Religions the greatest Happiness which can possibly attend the Society, is to have Men of Wisdom and of peaceable Dispositions for their Priests. Ecclesiasticks are in States what Emeticks are in Medicine. Nothing more useful when apply'd properly, nothing so dangerous when administred mal-a-propos. A Prelate of Probity, an honest Parson, a prudent Minister of any Church, a virtuous Rabbi are inestimable Treasures. But what Mischiefs do they occasion when these People give themselves up to work evil?

May'st thou dear Isaac, enjoy Content, Happiness and Satisfaction, as long as thou enjoyest Life.
Hamburgh.

P. S. It is proper that I should take notice here of a Thing which will be thought ridiculous by such only as know not the mighty Impression which the Actions of truly great Men stamp on Hearts sincerely addicted to Virtue. I have twenty times, when passing the Pont-neuf at Paris in the Night, on seeing his Statue, felt so affecting a Remembrance of the rare Qualities of Henry IV. that I could not avoid going up to the Iron Rails, and kissing them with infinite Respect. I must too own, that once or twice, I have burst there into Tears. I know there are some People who will call this Folly, but I must tell them that I despise alike their Censure and their Approbation. The Descendants of those who reached the Knife to that august Monarch's Breast, can have no Idea of the Sense honest People have of his Fate. The Difference between them and me is this ; I salute, with proper Respect, the Statue of a great and good King, while they superstitiously, and with a silly Veneration, kiss the Relicks of some doting Monk or canting Hypocrite.

LETTER CXXX.

JACOB BRITO, to AARON MONCECA.

IT is some time, my dear Monceca, since I left off speaking to you of the Manners and Customs of the ancient Egyptians : But I am now going to communicate to you what I have observed most curious in their Tombs. I have examined many, and in all have met with what abundantly satisfied my Curiosity.

There

There lies stretched on the Banks of the Nile, a sandy Plain, which is, as it were, the general Burying-Place of this Nation. It is full of Sepulchres, many of which have been opened. There are found in most of them Mummies in Chests or Coffins, which are still intire. Near these Coffins are frequently found the Images of those Gods, to whom, while living, the Person was most devoted. Thence is evidently derived a Custom amongst the Turks, of having certain Sentences out of the Alcoran interred with them, as also that practised by some superstitious Nazarenes, of having the Images of their Patrons buried with them: Thus you see this vain and silly Notion is far from being new. After this manner Superstition is perpetuated, and one Religion adopts the Chimæras and Puerilities of another.

The Method in use among some of the Nazarenes, of placing in their Churches certain Images, ex voto, in discharge of their Vows, is in like manner taken from the Egyptians and the Greeks. When they had either suffered Shipwreck, or very narrowly escaped some great Danger, they caused it to be represented in a Piece of a moderate Size, and when, by shewing it, they had excited the Charity and Compassion of the People, at last they dedicated it in the Temple of that Divinity to whom they thought themselves most indebted for their Preservation.

What in this respect was done two thousand five hundred Years ago, is practised at this Day. The Saints, Male and Female, have taken place of the Gods and Goddeses. St. George supplies the room of Mars, St. Anthony that of Pan, St. Lucia stands for Diana, and St. Cecilia for Minerva. There is no Corporation, no Company of Tradesmen without its Patron. The Shoe-makers have St. Crispin, the Taylors St. Placidus, the Rope-Dancers St. Pan-

Pantaleon: Tho' these last were never regularly incorporated, yet the Danger they stand exposed to, of breaking Legs and Arms, hath obliged them to look out a Patron for their whole Fraternity.

When I was at Venice, I was often in the Churches of the Nazarenes, the Walls of which were covered with Thighs, and Heads, and Hands, and Arms, and Feet, &c. all made of Wax, and consecrated to the Saint unto whom the Church was dedicated, in Acknowledgment of Miracles supposed to have been wrought by him. This formed at once the most pleasant, and withal, the most whimsical Sight in the World.

A Nazarene, who had not much Faith in Legs of Wax, told me a pleasant Story when I was in Germany. He inform'd me that one Michon having had the good Luck to marry his Sweetheart, exerted himself in an extraordinary Way for some Months after their Nuptials. He had a sound Constitution; the Accomplishment of his Desires added to his Vigor, and Madam Michon thought herself exceeding happy in her Choice. However, an unlucky Accident came suddenly to damp the Felicity of this happy Bride. Mr. Michon, who was neither a Saint nor a true Lover, used to stray now and then, believing it incompatible with the Character of a Smart, to be confined like the Vulgar. One Evening having sup'd with his Friends, and the Wine putting odd Notions into his Head, he went to a certain Temple of Venus, where he offered, according to the Custom of the Place, and brought away a flaming Return. Mr. Michon, however, perceived it in time, and being excessively embarrassed, imposed on his Wife a Course of Abstinence, equally unusual and unsatisfactory. She endured for some time this Misfortune without speaking, but at last losing all Patience, she ventured to enquire the Reason of his Behaviour in the following Terms. I cannot conceive, said she, Mr. Michon, whence your Indifference proceeds; but I am very sensible that for some time past we have lived together pretty coolly. This Discourse perplexed the Husband not a little, he would not on any score tell the matter of fact, and yet finding it necessary to say somewhat, he first fetched a deep Sigh, and then in a faint Voice proceeded thus: Alas! Madam Michon! I have met with the saddest Accident! The poor Woman alarm'd at this Introduction, pressed him to explain himself. Is it so, cry'd she, that you have still your Secrets; what then is become of that eternal Affection you swore to bear me? I am going continued he, to inform you of an Adventure which has driven me almost to despair. I went some days ago with a few Friends to a Country Place not far from Town. There walking about I attempted to jump over a little Ditch, and my Foot slipping, — I can scarce tell you the rest. I made such an Effort to save my self, that I quite strain'd not my Leg or my Ankle, but a Part of far greater Consequence. O mercy! exclaim'd Madam Michon, what is it you tell me? Is it possible? Yes, my dear Spouse, return'd Mr. Michon, there is nothing more certain. But bad as it is, my Malady is not without Remedy. An eminent Surgeon, under whose Care I am, assures me, that in six Weeks I shall be certainly cured, without retaining the least Inconvenience from the Accident. O, rejoind the Lady, you have quite revived my Spirits, I was afraid your Illness would have been far more stubborn and dangerous. We must, however, neglect nothing which may contribute to your Cure; I'll go and offer a Vow to St. Pantaleon. 'Tis to him we address in case of broken Bones or strain'd Sinews; I doubt not, but by his Assistance, to see you speedily recovered. - Madam Michon made haste to execute her Design. She made the Figure of the Part afflicted in Wax, and then away she hurried to the Church of the Cordeliers, to have it exposed in an honourable Place. A young Lad carried the Offering in a Bason covered with Linen. The Monk who performed the Ceremony removing the Cloth, was surprized at the Sight, and turning away his Eyes, Carry away that, said he to the Boy. Father, reply'd the Child, in a soft Tone, it is the Vow of Madam Michon. Carry it away, I say, cry'd the Monk hastily, and tell her, we have incomparably better in the Convent. Thus Madam Michon's Vow lost its place, but her Husband recovered speedily for all that.

The Nazarenes are the first in turning their own Superstitions into ridicule ; But they continue Slaves to them for all that. This, dear Monceca, is an evident Proof that there is little Solidity in their Judgments. I cannot well comprehend how Folks act commonly directly opposite to their Manner of Thinking. One is surprized to see the most extravagant things done sometimes by Men who discourse very reasonably. When one hears these People talk, one is apt to imagine that they were intended for the Instructors of Mankind ; yet, upon examining their Conduct, the Man of Sense is lost, we discover in his stead, the Bigot, the Furiioso and the Debauchée.

I now return, my Friend, to the Tombs of the ancient Egyptians. You know that the Pyramids, which are so famous, are the Monuments of Kings. The Grandees of the Kingdom followed their Examples, and caused those to be erected which are distinguished by the Name of the lesser Pyramids, and lie along the Side of the River. As for private Persons, they were interred in the Catacombs which are very numerous in the sandy Plain situated in the Neighbourhood of the southern Pyramids. When they were interr'd in these Tombs, they covered the Stone which closed up the Entrance four or five Foot deep with Sand, which contributed not a little to the Preservation of the Bodies, by securing them from the Injuries of the exterior Air. Over and above this Precaution, there was no Egyptian but was embalmed after his Decease, in a manner more or less costly, according to the Abilities of his Heirs.
are

Superstition was also the Cause of all this Care about Funerals. The Priests assured the People, that in a certain Period of Years, an entire Revolution would happen, and those whose Bodies could be preserved to that time, would have them restored and live in them again. Every one, from that Self-love which is inherent to Man, being desirous of finding at that time his old Case, directed his Heirs to take all imaginable Care of their Bodies. What astonishes me is, that the Hump-back'd, the Lame, the Blind, and every other maim'd kind of Folks, had as strong an Inclination as the rest, to inhabit a second time so incommodious and so disagreeable a Lodging. It is apparent from hence, that these Egyptians did likewise believe, that when the Body was once destroyed, there was no getting another. However, 'tis certain, that all this Pains was taken for the Cabinets of the Curious and the Apothecaries Shops of the present Times.

Amongst the Bodies of deceased great Men, which had been preserved through many Ages, and were actually intire in the time of Augustus, Historians mention particularly that of Alexander the Great. They tell us farther, that Augustus being in Egypt had the Curiosity of going to see the Tomb of that famous Prince, and that he saw therein the Body in a Shrine of Glass substituted in the room of one of Gold, which was taken away by Seleuchus Cybiosactes *. 'Tis idle, dear Monceca, for Sovereigns the most potent and the most dreaded, to dream of respect being paid them after Death. Time delivers Men from that servile Attention which living Princes exact, and the Tombs of the old Egyptian Kings, that of Alexander and other Heroes of Antiquity, have been violated with as little Ceremony as those of private Men. They were not so much as spared in Times wherein their Memories were recent. We adore, in a manner, living Princes, and Crouds of Flatterers continually pursue them with Vows for their Prosperity: But,

When breathless, they are Dust become,
And all the Glories of their Pride,
Are shrunk within the silent Tomb,
Tho' for its Splendor it be ey'd,
Yet they are low and lost indeed,
And hungry Worms upon them feed.

There all their swelling Titles lose,
Givers of Peace and Thunderbolts of War;
And as no more they can their Bounty use,
There free from Flatterers they are.
Nature makes equal in their Graves,
Whom Fortune made or Lords or Slaves †.

See, my dear Monceca, what becomes of Monarchs the most potent and the most redoubtable! It is impossible to express the sudden, the certain Fall of human Greatness better than Malherbe has done.
The

* Suetonius in Octav. cap. xviii. Dion. Cass. lib. i.
p. 454. Strabo. lib. xvii. p. 794.
† Malherbe.

The first time I read over the Works of that inimitable Poet, I was prodigiously struck with these Lines. A Native of France, settled at Pera, made me a present of his Writings; which I have constantly preserved with the greatest care, as scarce inferior to those of Horace.

Take care of yourself, dear Monceca, live content, happy, and without care; and let me hear from you sometimes.

Cairo.

LETTER CXXXI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

IN my last I wrote you my Sentiments concerning those great Princes, who are in some measure deify'd by Posterity; and I then ventured without Ceremony to give Henry IV. of France, Preference before them all. I have often reflected since that time on the Reasons which induced my so doing; and the more I consider them, the more I am persuaded that I was in the right in so doing. I have so thorough a sense of the great Virtues of that Monarch, that I make no question but Heaven design'd the Punishment of France by the Civil Wars, and other Mischiefs she endured, during the Minority of Lewis XIII. for the little care taken in avenging that terrible Parricide. They contented themselves with punishing the Assassin; and the Loss of so great and good a King, was follow'd only by the Execution of a single Villain. On such an occasion, all, who by their Practices or by their Discourses had promoted so abominable a Fact, should have been waisted together to their long Homes, through a Sea of Blood. All the Proscriptions of the Triumvirates which made Rome itself tremble, would have been justifiable at such a time; and there ought to have been offered on the Tomb of that generous Prince every Person, on whom a just and well-grounded Suspicion could have been fixed.

It seemed as if Heaven reserved the Punishment of this Crime to itself, in order to render it more terrible, and to exert itself on such occasions in an extraordinary manner: For so it is, that Providence rarely permits Assassins to escape even in this Life their deserved Rewards, especially when it is a Prince on whom their Cruelties have been exercised. The Murder of Cæsar is a pregnant Instance of the Truth of what I say. History informs us, that of sixty Persons who conspired against him, not one died a natural Death. They all perished miserably, and with all the Circumstances of Horror that can be conceived. Cassius, who was the last, met a Fate as melancholly as that of the rest*. The Deity, always careful and attentive to the Safety and Tranquility of Men, seems to have bound himself to punish even in this World such Wretches as dare attack the Persons of Princes.

Reflect, my dear Isaac, on a thing which is not more strange than true. Almost all the Nazarene Monarchs who have been assassinated, have met with their Fate from the Hands of Monks, or from Persons influenced by them. It was a Dominican

* Plutarc. in Cæsare. Sueton. in Jul. Cæs. cap. lxxx. Eutrop. lib. vi. circa finem.

minican who poison'd the Emperor Henry VII; and in the Performance of that execrable Fact, he had recourse to the most sacred Rite in his Religion. Another Monk of the same Order, plunged his Poniard into the Breast of Henry III. of France. A Jesuit solicited*, and at length influenced a crack-brain'd Youth† to attempt the Murder of the best King in the World‡. What Ills may they not perpetrate, when assembled in a Body? And yet those who ought most to hate and to detest them, suffer them to throng about their Persons through an Excess of Weakness. We are told, that Lewis the XIIIth, of whom I was speaking to you, trembled when he saw a Monk, and did not care that they should remain long in his Presence. I readily believe this; but you may rely upon it, that even to this day Monks are forbid to enter the Castle of Versailles without Permission, or to come any where else where the King is. I was informed of this, when I was at Paris; and I am positive, as to the Fact.

In spite of all these Marks of Contempt, which are shewn towards the Monks on certain Occasions, I think we may justly apply to them what Tacitus says of Astrologers, against whom they continually issued Edicts, in order to drive them out of Rome, and yet kept them there notwithstanding†. But this is a Business belongs to the Nazarenes, and not to us; if they have a mind to be governed by Monks, what have we to do to find fault; let us leave them in their Infatuation, and proceed to a more entertaining Subject.

E 4

I

* John Guignard.

† John Chatel.

‡ Henry IV.

† Genus Hominum Potentibus infidum; sperantibus fallax; quod in Civitate nostrâ, & vetabitur semper, & retinebitur. Tacit. Hist. lib. I.

I am soon to embark for England, with two Men of very different Characters; the one is an extravagant Admirer of the Italian Musick, a great Traveller for the sake of improving himself in this Science, and who has been actually in Italy for that purpose a considerable space of time. He never speaks of any thing but Concerts, Symphonies, Virtuosi, Sonatas, Motets, Cantatas, &c. The other is a Metaphysician, everlastingly in the Clouds, and who employs all his time in reconciling the Systems of Descartes, Gassendi, Locke and Malebranche. He is disturbed in his Conversation, so as to appear distracted; and sometimes one can scarce get four Words out of him in a whole Day. One sees him frequently stamp, bite his Nails, scratch his Head; and when the Question is very intricate, you would think by his Distortions that he laboured under some very terrible Distemper. It happens now and then that in the midst of his profound Meditations, our Lover of Musick consults him on the Beauty of a new Air; Sir, says he, do me the favour to give me your opinion of this Song. Upon this he falls a singing, and whilst he is a quavering his Italian, the Metaphysician shrugs up his Shoulders, turns up his Eyes towards Heaven, and from the bottom of his heart wishes Song and Songster both at the Devil. He endeavours to get away, and to shelter himself in another Room; but the Man of Song, to prevent this, seizes his Arm. Ah, dear Sir, says he, don't stir, let me sing that Verse over again! — Well! Is it not fine? — Without question, that Vinci is a great Man! I protest, I would rather have been the Author of his Artaxerxes, than be King of Corsica. Speak truth now, Sir, and acknowledge, that Philosophers make but a mean figure in the World, when compared with Musicians.

These

These last Words bring the Metaphysician to his Senses, and how much soever he was buried in Thought, he could not endure with Patience to hear these great Men run down, of whom he thinks it his honour that he is a Disciple. You think then, says he, with a disdainful Smile, that a Musician ought to receive a deal of Respect in the World, and that there is a great deal of Knowledge and Genius requisite in order to sing Re, Mi, Fa, Sol. Go, go, Sir, you only banter. Hark you, I will tell you of what Use Musick is of, in the World. It serves for—— nothing; or, at most, it serves only to amuse a few poor giggling Girls, and effeminate Petit Maitres. But Philosophy instructs Men how to behave wisely. This gives them Purity of Manners, teaches them to bridle their Passions; there is no Secret in Nature, which it does not unfold. In a word, it employs our Wits, and satisfies our Desires, at one and the same time.

“ But tell me, Sir, reply'd our Virtuoso in Musick, “ are not you a Philosopher, or don't you “ at least study Philosophy; are you in consequence “ of it content and quiet in your Mind? You “ shall hardly persuade me of that. I see you “ in continual Motion; you do not enjoy so much “ as a Moment's Ease. You eat sometimes, with- “ out knowing that you are eating; and speak “ too, not seldom in the very same way. Your “ Head is so full of Chimæra's, that you can hard- “ ly tell when 'tis Day and when 'tis Night. “ T'other day you took into your head to throw “ yourself into a Reservoir; and if I, good-for- “ nothing Man of Song, had not catch'd hold of “ your Coat, your Philosophy had been in great “ hazard of being drown'd. Do you think to “ persuade me, that a Science which transports “ People so, as not to see a great Collection of “ Water at the foot of a Gravel-walk, commu“ nicates any kind of Wisdom? For my part, to “ tell you the truth, I cannot help thinking that “ you Philosophers are very comical sort of Peo“ ple. They are reading, forsooth, what is writ“ ten in the Heavens, without knowing what “ passes under their Feet *. You have a mighty “ Contempt for Musick, Sir ; but I defy you to “ prove that it is half so mischievous, as that sort “ of Fanaticism, which you call Philosophy. If “ it ravishes the Senses, it is in so soft, so sweet

 “ a manner, that we fall into a kind of ecstatic “ Repose.

“ Do but observe a Man coming out of an “ Opera House, you see him beating time with “ his Feet as it were for half an hour. If he is “ young and light-timber’d, he cuts a few capers,
 “ and presently falls a singing a favourite Air.
 “ He comes up to a Woman with a gallant Air, “ like that of Acis when he salutes Galatea ; all is “ easy, all is pleasant, like the Place from whence he “ comes. On the other hand, observe a young Fel“ low at the University as he is coming from the “ publick Schools, his Eyes how wild ! his Air how “ fierce ! his Head full of Logick, and a Syllogism “ between his Teeth. One Disputation just finish“ ed, he meditates another ; and is considering in his “ Mind what new Arguments may be made use of
 “ for demolishing his Adversary. He is everlastingly “ out of humour ; and all his Knowledge, all his “ Philosophy serves only to torment him. Tell “ me, dear Sir, which is most useful to Society,
 “ that kind of Study which vexes People, puts them
 “ as it were out of their Senses ; and under pre“ tence of rendring them wise, does in fact make “ them

* Quod est ante Pedes nemo spectat ; Cæli scrutantur plagas. Cicero de Divinat. lib. ii.

“ them Fools; or that which amuses them agree“ ably, removes all Chagrin, and leaves the Soul “ in perfect Tranquility. This, dear Sir, is the “ specifick Difference between Musick and Philo“ sophy. You may say what you please, but I “ shall never alter my Opinion.”

Mighty well! reply'd the Metaphysician, with an Air of Contempt; I would advise you to pass all your Life in Singing, you will be then upon the level with the Nightingales. As for me, I apprehend God has given me a Faculty of Thinking, and I am oblig'd to make use of it. I do not pretend to restrain you from exercising the Talents, bestow'd upon you by Nature; but I expect that you should likewise allow me to make use of such as have fallen to my Share.

“ You call that Thinking, reply'd our Advocate
 “ for Harmony, which is no better than following “ wild and extravagant Ideas, which are the Effects “ of a disorder'd Imagination; for my part, I “ look upon Thinking in quite another light. I “ apprehend it to be such an Use of Reason as “ enables me to pass easily through Life, and ad“ ministers to all those Wants which in the course “ thereof I am sure to feel. I believe 'tis better “ to leave searching into things beyond our Un“ derstanding, and to apply our selves to that “ sort of Knowledge which is useful and necessary.
 “ As for Example, contriving how to live com“ modiously and happily, to eat, drink, sleep, “ laugh, sing, and pass pleasantly the Days which “ Heaven bestows upon us, instead of bestowing “ them in useless Meditations. Tell me, dear Sir, “ what sort of Illness your way of thinking will “ cure? Can a Man, by studying the Metaphy“ sicks, ease himself of a Megrim. So far from “ it, that it will make him ten times worse; and “ he

“ he had better by half have heard an Overture of “ the Opera, or any other agreeable Piece of Mu-“ fick, which might have charm’d his Mind, and “ render’d him insensible of his Pain. When a “ Man is attacked by the Vapours, what good “ will Philosophy do him? Turn him perhaps quite “ mad, by increasing his Melancholy. But on “ the other hand, if he hears a Violin, his ill Hu“ mour goes off, his Spirits begin to revive, and “ he is as chearful as ever. There cannot be a “ stronger Demonstration of the Power of Mu-“ fick, than what is seen every Day in Italy, in “ the Case of a Person bit by a Tarantula.
 “ Go, harangue the sick Person about the Schemes
 “ of your Gassendi, Descartes, and all your Men “ of Science, it will signify just nothing; the “ Man will certainly die, in spite of all your E“ loquence. Let but a Fiddle enter, up jumps
 “ the Patient, leaps, skips, capers, and derives “ from Musick that Remedy which restores him
 “ to his Health and Senses. After he has footed
 “ it an Hour or two, weary and quite worn out,
 “ he falls fast asleep; and when he awakes, finds “ himself perfectly well. All the Philosophy in “ the World can do nothing like this: Can
 “ it? ”

I don’t know, Isaac, whether the Conversations of my Fellow-Travellers, wiil appear diverting to you; but I assure you, they prove so to me, and I pass my moments very agreeably in hearing their Altercations.

May’st thou enjoy thy Health, live content and happy, and may the God of our Fathers continue to cover thee with Blessings.

Hamburgh.

LETTER CXXXII.

JACOB BRITO to AARON MONCECA.

THE Diffensions, my dear Monceca, to which our Brethren stand exposed in this Country, have led me to make many Reflections on the reciprocal Mischiefs the Nazarenes do each other in consequence of that horrid Maxim, That it is not only lawful, but even necessary to exterminate Héreticks. The Consequences flowing from this cruel Principle are fatal alike to Men of all Beliefs, notwithstanding those who maintain them do not advert to its necessary Consequence, that it exposes themselves to all the Evils they inflict on their Adversaries. If once they reflected on the Inconveniences which a persecuting Principle draws after it, they would quickly change their Sentiments.

People that are Hereticks in one Country, are Orthodox in another; as those that are Orthodox in one Place, are Hereticks in another. This Truth will appear plainly, if we consider ever so slightly the prevailing Religions throughout Europe. A Protestant is an Heretick at Paris, but is one of the Elect at London. A Papist is an Idolater in England; whereas in France, it is held there is no passage to Heaven, but by the Popish Road. See then, how Nations who believe oppositely, agree in believing this, that all are Hereticks who are not of their Religion; that is, of their established Religion. If we should suppose the Principles of the Inquisition spread throughout all Nations, what Horrors! what Bloodshed would they bring upon the

the World! In Portugal, in Spain, in France, in Italy, in Austria, Bohemia and Poland, they would cut the Throats, burn, break on the Wheel, or massacre without Distinction, Lutherans, Calvinists, Church-of-England Men, &c. In Holland, Great-Britain, Denmark and Prussia, they would hang and draw Papists, if some Divines had their way, and the Magistrate had no more humanity than the Clergy. In Muscovy they would tyrannize over and condemn to Death both Catholics and Protestants, as equally Hereticks, in disbelieving the Russian Faith. In Turkey again, the same Muscovites would fall a Sacrifice to the Glory of Mohammed; and in Persia, to the Honour of Ali.

Observe, dear Monceca, the Horrors, Crimes and Impieties, which follow incontestably from this Maxim, That we ought to persecute Hereticks, and oblige them to change their Sentiments by Punishments and Tortures. If such as pretend to be animated by a true Zeal for the Glory of God, were really influenc'd by any such Spirit, they would be far from endeavouring thus to convince the Mind, or from thinking it a right way to remove Prejudices from the Heart, to have recourse to such Violences as are contrary to the Law of Nature and the Idea which Reason gives Men of the Deity. They would perceive, that in persecuting their Adversaries they expose their Brethren to the same Mischiefs wherever they were scattered in other Places. But inasmuch as they are guided by their Passion, or rather by their Fury, provided they do but accomplish their Designs in the Places where they are Masters, they never think of what may happen any where else, in consequence of what they do at home.

The Roman-Catholicks, or rather the Court of Rome, the Ecclesiasticks and the Monks employed all all sorts of Methods, in order to drive the Protestants out of France. After a good deal of Murder and Bloodshed, they brought their Project to bear. But what followed ; why, the Popish Religion it self received very shortly the greatest Check it ever sustain'd. England totally barr'd Popery from returning thither ; it cost an unhappy King three Kingdoms ; or rather it cost a weak Prince such a Sacrifice for confiding in Priests ; and the Protestants they had banished served for a Pretence to exile an infinite Number of Papists, and seizing their Effects.

While at Paris, they destroyed without Mercy whatever wore the Appearance of Protestantism ; the Prince of Orange wisely made use of the Handle their Madness furnished. To say the truth, his Affairs would have suffered if those of the Reform'd Religion had been more mildly treated. To the Persecutions raised by the French Clergy, and to the Clergy in another Country, that Prince stood indebted for the Crown of Great Britain. If the Jesuits, from their Itch to governing, had not put King James on so many Extravagancies, William III. would have found no Occasion of going over to England, in order to maintain the Rights and Liberties of an oppressed Nation. All Historians agree, that King James push'd his Attachment and Submission to the Jesuits much too far. Madam de la Fayette, tho' a zealous Catholick, acknowledges nevertheless in her Memoirs of the Court of France during the Years 1688 and 1689, that when they came in that Country thoroughly to know the Character of this Prince, they retained for him only a sort of Pity bordering on Contempt. The Archbishop of Rheims, Maurice le Tellier, as we are inform'd by that Lady, could not help saying, in a sneering Way, Look upon that good Man, he quitted
three

three Kingdoms for one Mass. It was also thought a Mark of his bad Taste, that he was continually beset with Jesuits, and that he affected to say that he was of their Order *. The Continuator of Rapin's History of England, tho' they are declared Enemies to the Protestant Religion, have made no difficulty of inserting this singular Story, and of adding to it the following Reflection. They, that is, the People of France, went so far, as to impute secretly his Misfortunes to him, as if they were Crimes, on account of his having engaged France in a tedious and ruinous War, of which they foresaw the Effects †.

It was not, however, King James, dear Monceca, to whom the French ought to have attributed the Troubles and Difficulties that were brought upon them by the maintaining his Cause. It was to them who gave him those pernicious Counsels, and plunged him into that Abyss from whence he never got out; it was to them that they should have attributed those Evils, and on them they should have devolved their Spleen. The Misfortunes of that Prince were the Effects of the Ambition of the Jesuits, and of their pernicious Maxim, that all means are to be employed for destroying Hereticks. The English had before their Eyes the Example of the French Protestants; and they were afraid with good Reason, that they should one Day find it their own Case. “ If the King, said they, begins to “ diminish our Privileges, and to extend those of “ our Adversaries, we shall by little and little be “ reduced into a Situation which will incapacitate “ us from resisting the Designs of the Court of “ Rome. At present they make use of Fraud, by “ and by they may make use of open Force. The “ French Protestants set Henry IV. upon the “ Throne;

* P. 120, 124, 155.

† Continuation de Rapin Thoyras, tom. xi. p. 41.

“ Throne ; so long as he lived, they were not op“ pressed, but a little after his Death they began “ to trick them, and then to persecute them ; at “ last they banished them, and taught them to ex“ perience the Effects of that abominable Maxim,
 “ that to make use of all Methods to extirpate “ Hereticks, is allowed by divine and human “ Laws. Let us then prevent the Storm which “ threatens us ; let us strangle the Serpent we have “ nourished in our Bosom, and give a mortal “ Wound to Popery, by dethroning a King who “ protects it, and would establish it on the Ruins “ of our Liberty, and our Religion. If there is “ any thing base in this Action, our Enemies have “ no Right to reproach us ; if we rebel, we rebel “ against a Popish Prince, and they set us the Ex“ ample in refusing to acknowledge a Protestant
 “ one. Did they not publish a Million of Writings, “ to prove that a People were not bound to submit “ to a Heretick Prince, their Preachers employed “ all their Talents for publishing this Doctrine in “ the midst of Paris. At present we find it neces“ sary to adopt their Maxim ; we do no more than “ dethrone a King attainted and convicted of Pope“ ry, which, with reason, we look upon as of all “ others the most dangerous Heresy.”

Observe, my dear Monicca, in the Remarks made by the English, what fatal Effects the Doctrine of Reprisals in religious Wars will inevitably have. Consider, at the same time, the Mischief which the ungoverned Rage of different Sects hath brought upon whole Nations. For after all, notwithstanding the Risques the Protestants in England might run, I can by no means approve of their Conduct. I am thoroughly persuaded, that it is not lawful for Subjects, on any Pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against their Prince ; and I have

have often, with great Pleasure, heard you maintain the same thing with much Vivacity. However, when once we admit, that Men are at liberty to break their Faith to Hereticks, and to compel them by force to alter their Opinions, we open a wide Gap to all sorts of Disorders; we shake the Thrones of Kings, and breathe into the People among whom we inhabit, a Spirit of Treason and Rebellion.

If it were once thoroughly established throughout Europe, That Religion has nothing to do with Government, how happy would the People be, and how much more at ease their Kings, than now they are? What is it to them, if some of their Subjects sing in French, in English, in Dutch, or in German, while others believe the Psalms are profaned in any other Language but Latin? If for this purpose they assemble on Saturday or on Sunday, pay their Taxes, and discharge all the Duties they owe to Society? But, say the Politicians, when there are many Religions in a Country, it is impossible but they should produce civil Wars. This I admit, if any one of these Religions maintains that pernicious Maxim, That it is lawful to employ all Methods for subverting and destroying others; and that sometimes all the other Sects will unite together, in order to demolish that which would otherwise tyrannize. But in a well-governed State, where the People in general are persuaded that every Man ought to be allowed to think freely, and to serve God as he sees proper, all the World will enjoy Peace and Quiet, tho' there should be fifty different Religions in the Dominion of that State. In order to be convinced of the Truth of this Proposition, we need only enquire into the present Situation of England and Holland. How many different Sects are there in those Countries? Yet they give each other other no manner of Trouble. Jews, Anti-Trinitarians, Quakers, Anabaptists, Lutherans, Presbyterians, Independents, Muggletonians, dispute sometimes with each other, but they never think of cutting Throats; and if sometimes there happens any Troubles on account of religious Controversies in England, all the different Sects treat it as a Popish Spirit, and immediately enter into a League offensive and defensive, in order to cover themselves from its Effects. In a word, they seem to be all equally afraid of this pernicious Principle, that it is a just and reasonable thing to persecute Hereticks for their own Good. To this Point a certain Author testifies, who both had an Opportunity of knowing, and was well acquainted with the Terror all Religions in England have of Popery. “ If “ one, says he, should ask me to what Degree dif“ ferent Sects are to be tolerated? I answer, that “ they ought all to stand on equal Terms; that “ they should at all times and in all places, be at “ liberty to justify their Faith, by Disputing, by “ Preaching in their Assemblies, and by Publish“ ing Books. But Popery ought to be entirely de“ prived even of the Benefit of Toleration, not as “ a Religion, but as a tyrannical Faction, ready “ to oppress others, and so far from being content “ with an Equality, that it is always striving for “ Dominion, and not only so, but seeks also the “ utter Destruction of such as oppose it*.”

To this Passage from the Virgil of England, permit me to add another from an illustrious Defender of Toleration, too much addicted to Philosophy to fall into any Prejudices on the Score of Religion.
 “ Never fear, says he, that the Missionaries should “ quarrel amongst themselves, when the great Bu“ sineſs

* Milton's Miscellaneous Works.

“ finess of Dragooning is on foot. The Thomists,
 “ and the Scotists, the Molinists and the Jansenists, “ forget their Differences, banish their Disputes,
 “ and labour one and all in the Execution of that “ Catholick Precept, Compel them to come in *.”

One thing, Monceca, surprizes me, the Popish Nazarenes are by no means ignorant of the Mischiefs induced by their violent Conduct on their Brethren in other Places. They know very well what Reproaches those Brethren of theirs suffer on account of these Persecutions, and of their Lust of Power ; and yet, instead of behaving more mildly, they act with greater Rancour than ever, as if they intended to perpetuate Persecutions, instead of putting an end to them. On the other hand, their Antagonists, possessed with the same unaccountable Spight, torment innocent Persons, who have nothing to do with the Cruelties committed by their Brethren. What Connection is there between an English Papist and an Italian Jesuit ? Or why should one be punished for the Faults of the other. It is as absolutely Popish to persecute an honest Roman Catholick in Ireland, as it is to banish a Protestant of France. Ought there to be Reprizals in Matters of Religion ? What Matter of Triumph ! What Subject for Reflection, Monceca ! doth the unequitable Conduct of the Nazarene Sects afford to an honest Jew ?

Fare thee well, Monceca, live content and happy.
Lisbon.

* Bayle, Dictionnaire Historique & Critique, tom. iii.
 p. 339.

L E T T E R CXXXIII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi, at Constantinople.

IT is not, dear Isaac, above four or five Days since I came to London. It is therefore impossible for me to give you any just Idea of the Character of the English. It is true I have taken notice of many Things which strike me, and which are certainly worthy the Attention of a Traveller; but as yet I have not had Leisure to look into them sufficiently. There is one thing which renders it very difficult to characterise the English. It is this: They have a great many Virtues, which seem directly opposite to Vices with which they are however tainted. The Contrarieties which one is sure to discern in examining the Manners and the Mode of thinking amongst these People, appear so extraordinary, that it requires a very serious Examination before one can pretend to assign their good or ill Qualities.

In order to give a true and just Notion of this Nation, it is absolutely necessary to divest one's self of all Prejudices, to forget that one is a Frenchman, a German, or Italian, and to form all our Sentiments of Men by Rules furnished by the Light of Reason. My Opinion is, that a Judge thus qualified, will find in the English many great and shining Qualities, tho' shaded by not a few Follies and Vices. But as there is no Nation possessed of Worth unabated by some disadvantageous Qualities, so if the Virtues of the English are found to be far more considerable than their Faults, we cannot, with any Shew of Justice, decry them as a People, or expect that while they are Men, they should not participate of the Frailties to which human Nature is liable.

I see, since I have been here, that the Inhabitants of this Country in general are large, well made, agile, robust People. I perceive likewise, that their exterior Form is in some measure a Picture of their inward Frame of Mind. Many intelligent People have assured me, that the Vigour and Activity of an English Genius, is not inferior to the Strength and Nimbleness of an Englishman's Body. Of this I shall endeavour to give you Proofs in my subsequent Letters, and promise you to communicate whatever Discoveries I make here, with a Sincerity becoming a Philosopher, to whom Mankind seems to be but one great Nation.

On my Arrival in London, I could not but take notice of that Plenty, Magnificence and Contempt of little Things for which the English, as a People, are distinguished when spoken of in other Nations. I likewise observed that Fierceness which Strangers are so apt to call Insolence ; and from the best Enquiry I have been able to make into it, I can by no means think it merits so harsh an Appellation.

If one were to judge of the English by what is said of them by other Nations, and regulate one's Opinion by theirs, one must fall into very gross Errors. Most of the Relations written by Travellers, are strongly seasoned with that Prejudice against England, which however ill founded, is spread but too generally throughout Europe. It is true indeed, that the English have given some Cause for this, by their common manner of preferring themselves to all

all the rest of Mankind ; an Indecency ever attended with ill Consequences.

This Fault, however, is not peculiar to them ; it is common, in some degree or other, to all Nations. To speak freely, the English push it too far, and with too little Reserve. As they are rich and powerful, they think, and sure it is a great Fault, that they are not bound to keep Measures with other People. But notwithstanding this, all the Tales which are daily told of their Brutality and want of Manners, deserve rather Pity than Correction ; and one should rather despise than attempt to confute them. I must allow that the English are not very desirous of being acquainted with Strangers ; and when they are acquainted with them, give them every now and then to understand that they are their Betters in every respect ; and I do admit that this Humour is ridiculous. Far be it from me to excuse such an unhappy Oddity of Temper, so contrary to the Rules of good Manners, and even to those of Reason. But still there is a good deal of Difference between Insolence and a good Opinion of one's self. Where is there a Creature more opinionated and self-conceited than a French Petit-Maitre ; and yet who is more civil, more complaisant, or more polite than he ? To say the truth, the English, to their good Opinion of themselves, add the Vanity also of giving others to understand as much, and it is this that renders their Conduct so disgusting.

A Stranger in this Country cannot walk the Streets without hearing the People enter into a Description of him, and blaming whatever he has about his Person differing from themselves. This puts a Traveller unavoidably out of Humour, he cannot with Patience hear his Countrymen injured through his Sides, and himself tacitely censured as well well as the rest. When therefore he comes home, he remembers nothing of the good Qualities of the English, their Faults only remain fresh in his Memory, and he paints them in such Colours as Spleen and Vengeance furnish him with.

I have done my utmost, Isaac, to discover the true Sources of the Pride and Haughtiness of the English, their Contempt of other Nations, and particularly of the French; and I imagine, that without much Difficulty, I am come at the true Cause. The Refugees, by their own Conduct, have inspired these People with a contemptible Idea of their former Condition, and by Reflection, with high Notions of their own. They who are opulent themselves, and live in the midst of Riches and Abundance, regard with an Eye of Pity, Men struggling with Want; and yet such as in this Country are not blessed with the Goods of Fortune, do not try all Methods, and endeavour at any Rate to better their Condition. On the contrary, satisfied with a little, while they enjoy it with Liberty, they live quietly and chearfully. We see few Englishmen going to seek their Fortunes; they blush at the Thoughts of getting Money in the Way of some other Adventurers. Their Commerce is their sole Resource; a Way equally reputable to themselves, and useful to their Country. It is not therefore at all strange that Men who think in this respect so philosophically, should despise People whom they see running all the World over in quest of Money, endeavouring to acquire it by all sorts of Means, even by such as with them pass for shameful and scandalous Methods.

One may venture to affirm, that such of the English as are well to pass, are fierce and haughty in right of their Fortunes, and that such as are in a meaner

meaner Condition, are vain and proud, because they know how to be satisfied with their Condition.

The great Number of Knights of the Industry which swarm in the City of London, contributes not a little to the giving the English an ill Opinion of the Foreigners in general, and of the French in particular. Such as have never travelled, form their Ideas of Strangers, according to the Conduct of those whom they have seen judging rashly of the whole Piece by the worst Part of its Selvidge.

This, without doubt, is the Cause of the Contempt these People have for the Inhabitants of every other Country but their own. To this Contempt they join an undisguised Hatred with respect to the French. On this head the Men of Quality and the Vulgar have but one Way of thinking; indeed it seems to be the Topick on which of all others they are best agreed. There are several Reasons which may be offered for this extraordinary Prejudice; the Wars subsisting as it were continually between the two Nations, their particular Interests which almost constantly thwart each other; and to sum up all, Religion, which carries all things to Extremities whenever it interferes with national Disputes.

If the Differences which have so long reigned between France and England were of the same Nature with those between the Germans and the French, the Conclusion of the War would also put an end to the Animosity between the Nations. When People fight for the Glory and Interests of their Sovereigns, as soon as they have received Satisfaction, the thing is at an end; no body thinks of what is past, tho' it frequently happens that whole Provinces have changed their Masters; the Inhabitants are neither the better nor the worse for it; they lose not either their Estates or their Privileges, but enjoy, under their new Sovereigns, all that they possessed under their old. But when there is a War between France and England, it is far from being the sole Concern of Sovereigns. Every private Man has his Share ; and as many Merchant as there are in each respective Country, so many Enemies there are. A French Ship taken by the English is a complicated Act, whereby all the Owners of that Ship and Cargo are injured in their tenderest Concern. Every Burgeſs of St. Malo's, every Trader of Dunkirk becomes the sworn Enemy of the Merchants of London ; and on the other hand, every Captain of a French Privateer is a petty Sovereign, and fights in his own Quarrel against the English Nation.

The Wars between the Empire and France are between Crown'd Heads ; the Wars between the French and the English are between particular People, and the ancient Hatred on each Side is strengthned by every new Difference ; this is much the stronger on account of Difference in Religion, which of all other Causes most keeps up national Antipathies.

All Men abhor such as would put any Restraint upon their Conſciences ; but even this Abhorrence grows ſtronger, when ſuch as are neither our Maſters, our Friends, or our Countrymen, pretend to meddle with our Religion. The Retreat of the late King James II. into France ; the Succours given him there ; the many Attempts made in his Favour, have provoked the English more than a War of twenty Years Duration,

Another thing, which has ſwell'd the Pride and Vanity of that Nation, is the needy and miſerable, and of conſequence, the mean and ſubmiſſive ſtate of a Multitude of French People, who have fled thither from time to time on account of their Religion. I do admit, that Folks who have loſt their Eſtates, who are baniſhed their Country, and have no means of eſcaping Want but from the Bounty of the English, are excusable in paying them greater Complaisance than it would be right in other Circumstances to do. But still there are some Bounds to be kept even in this Case, and they ought not to stoop to those outrageous Flatteries which of all things depreciate them most in the Opinions of those whom they flatter.
the

The English, who followed the Fortunes of King James, ought to have been Patterns to the French Refugees. They were banished, as well as they, they had exactly the same Grounds for Complaint; and yet distinguishing their Country from those particular Persons who were at the Helm, and were the immediate Instruments and Favourites of King William, they were as true Britons at St. Germain's as at London.

How is it possible that People who sincerely love their Country, who have a Passion deeply engraven for it in their Hearts, who are capable of maintaining this Spirit, and this true Greatness of Soul, in a strange Country, and under a Load of Misfortunes? How is it possible, I say, that so gallant a People should do otherwise than despise an abject Race of Men, continually decrying the Land of their Nativity, blaming what before they applauded, and blindly approving what they heretofore condemned. It is certain, my Friend, that this Conduct in the French hath in part drawn the Contempt of the English upon them. They would have found the same Relief if they had kept up their Spirits under their Misfortunes; and if they had shewn a Resolution not to sacrifice that Love they ought to have had for their Country, for the sake of a precarious Subsistence, I am confident the English would have esteemed them much more than they do.

Farewell, dear Isaac, and let me often hear from thee.

London.

L E T T E R CXXXIV.

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

I Begin, dear Isaac, to know the English Nation well enough now to enter on a distinct Account of them. At present I shall not offer any thing to your View relating to their Nobility, which when I do, I must distinguish into various Classes, but content my self with endeavouring to give you a clear Notion of the rest of the Nation.

The English are not such Fools to think Trade a Scandal: Amongst them a Man of Business makes a very considerable Figure, and with Reason; for while he endeavours to enrich himself, he at the same time contributes towards the enriching of his Country. Almost all the Merchants in this Country are the Sons of Knights, or at least of principal Gentlemen; nay, there have been sometimes Lords, who have thought it no Discredit to them that their Brethren and their Children were bred up to Trade.

The Idea which the English have of Merchants, renders People of that Denomination quite another sort of Men than they are elsewhere. As there is nothing in their Profession which either damps their Spirits, or debases their Reputation, they think in quite another way than French, German, Flemish, or Italian Merchants do. They have as quick Notions of Honour as of Interest, and are no less concerned cerned for their Country's being enriched, than for the Increase of their private Fortunes. This is one of the great Causes of the bright Figure which Trade makes in London.

There is another thing peculiar to the Traders in this Country; it is the wise and prudent use they make of the Riches they acquire. When an Englishman hath raised an Estate in Trade, he leaves it off and becomes a Country Gentleman. They are indefatigable for some Years in Business, and then they wisely and contentedly sit down and enjoy the Fruit of their Labours. It seems as if this Nation alone had preserved a just Sense of that Equality which Nature meant to establish among Men. It is not only the Traders do not suffer themselves to be imposed upon by the swelling Sounds of empty Titles, but the very People behave with proper Moderation in this respect, and in their Addresses to the Great, shew nothing of that Fear and slavish Admiration which is so common in all other Countries.

A Lord here is only respected in proportion to the Good he does. If he is a good-natur'd, easy, affable and generous Person, he is generally esteemed, and meets with all the Marks of Respect he can desire; which are so much the more pleasing, because he well knows he would not receive them, if they were not due to his Merit. If on the other hand, he has no good Qualities in him, he is looked upon with Indifference, and treated as a useless Member of Society. He enjoys, it is true, the Privileges due to his Rank, and leads just such a Life at London as a discarded Courtier at Versailles. I must tell you farther, my Friend, that an English Nobleman appears to be more mortified on losing the Regards of his Countrymen than a Frenchman seems to be when in disgrace with his Prince.

You will the more readily apprehend this, when I tell you, that a strong Passion for Glory, and for the Honour of his Country is predominant in every English Soul.

It is not only in this sort of Conduct towards the Great, that the meaner sort of People resemble the more substantial. It is the same thing with regard to most of the good and bad Qualities they possess: For the English in general being a thinking People, Reason and Common Sense supply even in the meanest of them, any Defects in their Education.

The Manner in which the People are dressed, is a Demonstration of the Ease in which they live. One sees here an Air of Abundance, among even the lowest People; and it is this extraordinary Plenty which makes the Mob insolent, and gives that Air of Fierceness complained of even in those of superior Rank. Self-conceit is the natural Defect of the Inhabitants of this Country. Whatever Situation of Life they are in, they set a high Value upon themselves; for let them live how they will, they are still Englishmen, and on this they ground a kind of indelible Title to Respect.

I told you in my first Letter, that the Virtues and Vices of this Nation, are equally great, and that one sees in their Characters astonishing Contradictions: I will now support this Observation by Instances. The English have a great and noble Spirit; they detest Treachery; this Generosity of theirs will not allow them to see Combatants on unequal Terms. If a Man in the Streets of London should pretend to cane another who had no Stick in his Hand, he would be mobb'd. But if a Person were indiscreet enough to draw upon a naked Man, the Prentice Boys and Journeymen in the Neighbourhood, would be tempted either to pull him to pieces or throw him into the Thames. Such are the Effects of this their generous Impetuosity, which seems excusable on account of the Rectitude of their Intentions. But these very People, who can't endure to see Men engaged on unequal Terms, resemble the ancient Romans in their liking to Gladiators. Is there not something savage in beholding such bloody Spectacles? When they can't see Men fight, they divert themselves at the Expence of Cocks, Dogs and Bulls. This Ferocity of theirs must be satisfied, and for want of their own Species, they are content to sacrifice Animals to their Humours.
the

Who can imagine, that a People so cruel and bloody in their Diversions, are notwithstanding humane and charitable in the highest Degree? There are, however, very few among the English, who, if their Circumstances allow it, refuse an Alms to the Poor. Nay, they carry the thing further still; they do not stay till they are ask'd, the Sight of Indigence is sufficient to move them, and from a Motive of Humanity they give, that they may be easy in themselves.

One of the most singular Differences in the Temper of these People is their Contempt of Trifles, and their excessive Love of what they call the Fashion. One cannot but be amazed to see in the same People Sentiments and Inclinations so intirely opposite. To this Oddity I cannot help joining another, which is perhaps as singular, viz. their Propensity to Chicane. When one considers the Multitude of Law-suits which are daily decided in London, and when one reflects on the Prudence and good Sense which one every where discovers in the Books and Discourses of the English, one is tempted to think, that they talk like Philosophers, think like Pettifoggers, and act like the Normans, from whom, in a great measure, their best Families are descended. This is certain, that false Witnesses are as plenty here as in Normandy. Nay, one would imagine that they had some Respect for them, and were afraid of destroying the Breed; they punish them so slightly in comparison of what they deserve, that a Knight of the Post in London is infinitely a safer Employment than a Jansenist Bookseller in Paris.

As to Religion, every Englishman has one of his own Cut. If there was a Proclamation to bring in their Creeds, I do verily believe there would not be two alike. But notwithstanding these Variations in Point of Belief, they are incredibly zealous for the particular Sects under the Denomination of which they range themselves. A Churchman hates a Presbyterian as heartily as a Jansenist does a Jesuit. The Presbyterian pays the Churchman in his own Coin, but they unite in detesting a Papist, who has in his Turn a cordial Abhorrence for them both*.

How does so whimsical a Behaviour as this agree with the good Sense of the English, and with that Toleration in Matters of Religion which subsists among them? One is forced, when one speaks freely, to confess that there are a kind of Follies which may be stiled national, and that a People ought to be esteemed wise and happy whose Weaknesses are few and favourable. On this Principle, dear Isaac, I cannot help saying, that the English are very much indebted to Nature. For amongst the different Follies with which all Nations are infected, the English have for their Share the lightest, and the least dangerous to good Sense. With these small

* *Inde furor vulgi quod numina vicinorum
Odit quisque locus; cum solos credat habendas
Esse Deos, quos ipse cecit.* Juv. Sat. xv.

small Faults, they have great and shining Virtues. We observe amongst them a Constancy which elsewhere passes for philosophick. They have the Courage to declare against old Opinions whenever they discover them to be erroneous; it signifies nothing to tell them that their Fathers thought so and so, and that they ought to revere the Antiquity of any Opinions. This, I say, signifies nothing to them; for no sooner is the Delusion manifest than they assert their Right of discarding it. It is a common thing to hear an Englishman say, We have play'd the Fool as to such or such a thing these two or three hundred Years, it is high time that we should become wiser, and not put it into the power of our Children to make the same Complaints, and with the same Justice, against us, that we do against our Forefathers.

It is certainly, dear Isaac, a pleasing thing to discern in a whole Nation a Disposition to make use of their Reason; and this appears the more extraordinary, when we consider that most other Nations condemn and persecute such as have the Courage to act in this manner.

Another essential Quality in the English is their Neglect of Nicety, or as they call it Finicalness. A Petit-Maitre at London is not more the Jest of Men of Sense than of the meanest People. He is regarded by both as a sort of a Marmot, or any other pretty dancing Animal that's shewn at Fairs. You cannot imagine, my Friend, how much I admire this Sagacity. For surely, if Custom did not blunt the Understandings of other Nations, they would see these Triflers in the same Light, and be as well pleased with their Tricks and Grimaces, as with a Monkey's dancing on the Rope.

The English are commonly charged with Inconstancy and Fickleness. To say the truth, their History is a clear and distinct Proof of the Inequality of their Behaviour towards their Princes. In order to excuse this, they pretend that they have never been wanting in their Duty with respect to their Sovereigns, but when they were forced to it in order to preserve their Rights. If this Assertion of theirs was founded in truth, one might believe that the Love of Liberty was the Cause of their Revolutions. But notwithstanding all they say in extenuation of their Conduct, it is easy enough to see that this Liberty, of which they talk so much, serves sometimes only for a Pretence to cover their Lightness and Love of Change. Ambitious Men amongst them know how to work on the Credulity of the People, and by filling their Minds with false Fears upon this Subject, conduct the Motions of popular Fury in such a manner as to lift themselves into the best Places.

To be convinced of the truth of this, one needs only consider the Revolutions amongst them, as they themselves represent them. We shall see that they have happened under Princes of Characters directly opposite; whence it is plain, that the Conduct of their Princes was not the true Cause. The English were equally displeased with the soft and indolent Behaviour of Henry VI. and with the bold and enterprizing Temper of Edward IV. deposing both these Princes in their Turns; and by an Effect of the same Inconstancy unknown to every other Nation, they were alike displeased with the Gallantry and Love of Pleasure which distinguished Charles II. and the Capacity and Activity which all the World allowed to William III. They caball'd and plotted against both with the same Obstinacy, tho' they had set each of them upon the Throne with all possible Marks of Joy and general Satisfaction.

These

These Troubles under Kings so different in their Maxims of Government, shews plainly that the Fault lies in the English Nation, and that which still more clearly proves, that the Rights and Liberties of the Nation are not always in question, is, that Revolutions have happened under Kings, who, instead of encroaching upon or violating, have actually conserved and enlarged their Rights by voluntary Concessions. Let us, however, my Friend, acknowledge, that tho' English Sovereigns have not always been in fault, yet have they not on the other hand been always free from blame.

Farewell, dear Isaac, live content and happy.

London.

LETTER CXXXV.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE English, dear Isaac, allow their King such a kind of Power as certain Philosophers attribute to the Deity. The Sovereign, in this Country, may do as much Good as he will, but as for Hurt, that lies pretty much out of his Reach: He may, if he pleases, spare an Offender's Life, but he can take away the Life of no Man. It is the Law, and the legal Judges only, who have the Power of punishing in this Country, where arbitrary Authority can do nothing. The most considerable Employments, however, are in the King, that is to say, say, are in his Gift. He nominates Bishops, and other dignify'd Clergy. He cannot however remove People from their Offices ; that must be done in a legal way. While Men in Place are honest, act up to their Duty, and are strictly speaking, the Servants of their Country, they have nothing to fear, either from the Inconstancy or evil Disposition of their Princes, who have an absolute Power over none but their domestick Servants.

The King and the State have their separate Rights. It is an establish'd Maxim in England, and openly defended by the best Lawyers, that the King has two Superiors, God and the Law, to whom he owes the same Respect with the meanest of his Subjects *.

Is it not true, said an Englishman, a Friend of mine, to me one day, that the People were not created to be the Slaves of Princes, and to afford them the cruel Pleasure of tormenting? He must be a Fool who should dare to say, that God created one Man to make others miserable. Since then Kings are appointed not for the Destruction, but for the Preservation of their People, not to do them Evil, but to be their Benefactors, it follows, that like other Men, they must be obedient to the Laws made for the common Good of the Society. If indeed, we could be always sure of having virtuous and wise Kings, there would be no need of circumscribing them within any Bounds, their Probity and Rectitude of Heart would sufficiently limit them, and answer effectually the Intention of these sort of Restrictions. But the Throne is too often fill'd with Persons who stand in the utmost need of Laws to controul their Wills. How happy had it been for the Romans, if in time they had check'd the Cruelties of Tiberius,
Ca-

* Rex in Regno suo superiores habet Deum & Legem.

Caligula and Nero, and obliged them to quit their Title to Sovereignty, when they took up the scandalous Trade of Tyrants?

Our Kings, continued my Friend, enter into a Contract with us; while they observe the Conditions of it, they have all imaginable respect paid them, they enjoy their Prerogatives in the most ample Manner, and are as absolute in doing good to their People as they can wish. It is true, if they forget their Promises, they run the Hazard of exciting some very dangerous Sedition. But to avoid this, there is no more requisite than that they should keep their Words, and remember, that at their Coronation they swore to observe the Laws and to see them observed. Why should the People be more bound by their Promises than their Sovereigns; a King who becomes a Tyrant sets his Subjects a bad Example, and teaches them by his own Conduct, to make light of the most sacred and solemn Agreements. But it may be said, that our Lives and Fortunes depend upon our Princes. True, and we ought to sacrifice both in their Quarrels, if they are wise and just. Inasmuch as they are the Fathers of their Subjects, we ought to behave towards them with filial Piety. But such a Submission can only be expected while that reciprocal Relation subsists whence it naturally arises.

If Kings are above the Laws, and if they may dispense with them when they think fit, to what Purpose do they promise that they will observe certain Rules? All that they do upon this head, and all the Assurances that they give are only Mummeries. When a Prince is crown'd, and there solemnly swears to observe certain Rules, we ought, it seems, to look upon this swearing as a mere necessary Form in the Ceremony, not to be omitted for the Sake of Decency, tho' in Fact it is useless, and serves only to shew that there were Freemen in times past, but that all who live now are Slaves.

Slaves. There is no body quite so mad as positively to assert this ; the most zealous Defenders of arbitrary Power acknowledge, that a Sovereign ought to keep his Promises, and yet absurdly, and beyond all Comprehension, they conclude that they may violate them with Impunity.

I must confess, my dear Isaac, that what this Englishman said to me seemed very plausible. In effect, it appears reasonable, that if we assert Kings are bound by their Promises, we should also admit, that it is lawful to disobey them when they break their Words ; for it seems to be a necessary Consequence of the mutual Engagements between Sovereigns and their People, that they should no longer subsist when those Conditions are wanting, for the sake of which it was agreed, that this Distinction of Sovereign and Subject should take place. Now it cannot be denied that such as have written with the greatest Warmth against Sedition, have positively asserted that Princes could not violate their Contracts with their People, without being guilty of Injustice. “ It must be allowed, says “ the famous Grotius *, that when Princes undertake to govern by certain Rules, their Sovereignty is in some Degree limited and restrained ; “ whether those Obligations regard barely the Exercise of their Power, or directly, and in the “ first Instance, affect the Power in their hands. “ In the first Case, whatever they do contrary to “ their Promise being an Act of Injustice, every “ Pro-

* Estendum tamen id ubi sit arctius quodammodo redditum imerium, sive obligatio duntaxa cadat in exercitium actus, sive etiam directe in ipsam facultatem. Priore specie, actus contra promissum factus erit injustus, quia vera promissio jus dat ei, cui promittitur. Altera autem specie erit etiam nullus defectu facultatis. Hugo Grotius, de Jure Belli & Pacis, tom. i. p. 121.

“ Promise vesting a Right in those to whom the “ Promise is made. In the other Case, the Act is “ unjust and void at the same time, for want of a “ legal Power to support it.”

Behold, my dear Isaac, a precise Decision by an Author whose Character is above Suspicion. But he explains himself still more clearly in another place, wherein he seems to have forgot his own System. “ Now, if it be demanded, says he, what “ will happen if this Clause be added to the Contract, that in case the King breaks his Word, he shall forfeit his Title to the Crown? I answer, that even in this case the Power of the King does not cease to be absolute, but that he holds his Power as it were for a time *.

It seems to me, Isaac, that our Author could not well say more against arbitrary Power, and the violating Subjects Rights with Impunity. Grotius, however, passes for an Author directly opposite in Sentiments to the Anti-Royalists. And tho’ it may be said in his favour, that there is no Contract between Sovereigns and Subjects, wherein it is expressly stipulated, that the Forfeiture of their Crowns shall attend the breaking of their Words, yet it is too feeble to destroy what he before advanced. For tho’ in these Engagements between Subjects and Kings it be not declared, that by the Violation of the Contract the Prince shall lose his Rights, such a Clause is nevertheless tacitly comprehended in them, because this Contract cannot be relied on, if the People did not reserve to themselves such a Power to enforce it. Without this,
 such

* Quid si addatur si Rex fidem fallat, ut tum Regno cadat? Ne si quidem Imperium desinet esse summum, sed erit habendi imminutus per Conditionem. Imperium temporario non absimile. Grotius de Jure Belli & Pacis, p. 125;

such Engagements would be fruitless; for tho' they might serve to bind Subjects to their Prince, yet it must be to such a Prince as could not bind himself in return. With respect to all such Conditions, they must either be real and effectual, or vain and useless. But the universal Opinion is, that they are real, and that both Parties are bound to observe them. Well then, both Parties must reserve a Right of forcing the Observation, and therefore, tho' it be not specified in the Engagements, that Princes when they break them lose their Authority, yet this Clause seems necessary to the Validity and the Security of the Contract.

These Reasons, dear Isaac, seem very strong against such as maintain that it is not lawful to take Arms against our Prince. I must own to you, however, that I am thoroughly persuaded the People have no Right to dethrone their Sovereign; I go still farther, for I am of Opinion, that if they had such a Power, the Abuse of it would bring upon them the greatest Miseries.

When we compare the Compacts between Sovereigns and their Subjects to those between private Men, we run into a very great Error. We ought to distinguish between the Promises of Kings, and those of their Subjects; the latter may be compell'd to the Performance of their Promises by a temporal Power, because they are subject to Men, but Princes being accountable only to God, are not under the same Predicament. The Engagements into which they enter with their People are not however useless, because they cannot be compell'd to adhere to them, in as much as they are binding before God, and in that Light Checks to their Wills.

Reason, and the Publick Tranquillity may both be urged to establish this Doctrine. For if it be admitted, mitted, that under a Pretence of violating the Laws, Princes may be dethroned, to what Mischiefs and Inconveniencies would all Governments be exposed? The People inconstant, whimsical, wholly inclined to change, would be subject to all Impressions, and be at all times ready to revolt. Restless and unquiet Spirits will always find specious Pretexts to excuse these Seditions and Troubles, so in the end Peace would be lost. “ I acknowledge, says Grotius *, that Kings are established to no other end than that they might administer Justice to their Subjects ; but it does not follow from hence, that the People are above their Kings. Guardians are assigned without doubt for the Good of their Pupils, and yet this Trust gives a Power to the Guardian over his Ward. I know it will be said, that a Guardian who is guilty of Male-administration may be discharged from his Trust, from whence some would conclude, that the People have the same Right with respect to the Prince. But the Case is very different ; for the Guardian hath a Superior on whom he depends, whereas the Prince has none. As in finite things there cannot be an infinite Progression, so it is absolutely necessary to stop at him, or in Re“ publicks

* Verum esse post Herodotum, Herodotus post Hesiodum dixit fruendæ Justitiæ causâ Reges constitutos. Sed non ideo consequens est quod illi inferunt Populos Reges esse superiores : nam & Tutela Pupilli causâ reperta est, & tamen Tutela jus est ac potestas in pupillum. Nec est quod instet aliquis Tutelam si male rem pupillarem administraret amoveri posse, quare & in rege idem jus esse debere ; nam in Tutore hoc procedit qui superiorem habet ; at in Imperiis quia progressus in infinitum non datur, omnino in aliquâ aut persona aut cætu constituendum est quorum peccata, quia superiorem se judicem non habent, Deus sibi curæ peculiari esse testator. Hugo Grotius, ubi supra tom. 1. p. 106.

“publicks at a Senate independent of all other “Powers except God.”

If we attentively consider these Reasons, it is impossible, my Friend, that we should not yield to them, and agree that in Contract, between Subjects and Sovereigns, Reason and the publick Good require, that Heaven only should judge of the Infractions of which the latter are guilty.

Those who take upon themselves the Characters of Advocates for the Rights of the People, fancy that the Respect we alledge due to Princes, is the mere effect of Prejudice, which we want Spirit enough to get over. But in this they are deceived, and it is easy to prove the contrary from the Examples of many great Men, who, tho' born under a Republick, excessively jealous of its Liberty, have nevertheless maintained, that it never can be lawful to take up Arms against Sovereigns, whatever Faults they commit. “We must, says an illustrious Roman, bear the Luxury or Avarice of our “Governors as we do dear Years, Storms, and other Irregularities in Nature. There will be “Vices as long as there are Men, but the Mischiefs “flowing from them are neither constant nor perpetual; on the contrary, there are times, in “which we are indemnified for these Mischiefs by
 “the Benefits we receive *.”

Is it possible, my Friend, to say, that a Man brought up in the midst of Rome, and who had imbibed from his tender Youth Republican Principles, should be persuaded that great Respect is due even to bad Princes through any sort of Prejudice?

I

* Quomodo sterilitatem aut nimios imbres & cætera natura mala, ita luxum & avaritiam Dominantium tolerate. Vitia erunt donec Homines, sed neque hæc continua & meliorum interventu pensantur. Tit. Liv. Hist. lib. iv. cap. lxxiv. num. 4.

I cannot believe that any Man living would advance such an Absurdity.

Fare thee well, Isaac, may the God of our Fathers give thee continual Prosperity.

London.

L E T T E R CXXXVI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

MEN of Quality in this Country are as little attach'd to the Court, as the meaner sort of People are to them. For as the People shew no Respect to a Lord farther than his Virtues and good Qualities demand, so the Nobility in general adhere to the Court only so long as it appears to have no Designs contrary to the Welfare of the People.

One thing, dear Isaac, is very extraordinary in England, and that is, to observe a sincere Love for their Country, in Men whose Employments oblige them to be about the Court. In all other Countries, Courtier and Slave are synonymous Terms; and with Reason, the Vices of Princes being as much adored by such Men as their Persons. But here, the Virtue and Probity of the Prince attracts Veneration; when they discern in their Sovereign any Faults which may be prejudicial to their Country, instead of flattering his Defects, they provide the best they can against it.

This

This Grandeur of Soul is the natural Consequence of the thinking Disposition of the English, who, generally speaking, decline Employments, and content themselves with the Pleasures of a private and retired Life. In France all the Gentlemen are naturally attached to the Court, even such as live in the Provinces are so accustomed to enjoy little Employments, that without them they cannot believe themselves happy, or in a Situation worthy of their Birth. Among them the Love of their Country is a mere Chimæra. What signifies the Misfortunes of their Countrymen to them, if they can but have the Pleasure of arriving, some Way or other, at an Employment which puts it in their power to revenge themselves upon such as have slighted, maltreated or injured them, while they were yet but private Men? The English think quite otherwise; there is not a Man amongst them who has any Ambition to be the first Slave. The Character of Independency appears more elevated to them than that shining Servitude which charms most Men in the other Courts of Europe. In this Country there are many private Men, who would refuse even the highest Posts of Honour, if they were to be attended with the Loss of Freedom of Sentiment, and that Liberty of Action which is their Delight.

It is in England, my dear Isaac, where it may be said, that Truth is carried even to the Throne, and appears there with Lustre. Happy the Nation since this Custom hath been introduced! The Prince too hath found his Advantage therefrom, by being delivered from those Errors into which Inattention or his Passions betrayed him, by Representations prudent and sincere. No Monarch ever repented of his listening to the Advice of those who set his Faults before him freely and truly, whereas many Kings have been misled, not a few totally destroyed by listening to base Flatteries. There is no Condition of Life, says Montaigne, which stands in need of more free and smart Advertisements than that of Sovereign Authority. — Kings frequently find themselves, before they are aware, engaged in the Hatred and Destruction of their People, by Steps they might have easily avoided. — Generally speaking, Favourites look more to their own Affairs than to those of their Masters; and in some measure they are in the right. For to speak the truth, the Liberties of a true Friendship are rude and perilous Attempts when exercised towards a Prince †.
many

It is to themselves, my Friend, that Courtiers owe this unlucky Situation, which Montaigne so well describes, the Liberties of a true Friendship are rude and perilous Attempts when exercised towards a Prince. If they all thought as the English do, they would never bring themselves to such a Pass as not to dare to exercise their Reason, and to look upon Truth as a dangerous and impracticable Virtue. They would by this means have preserved a Right of being useful to their Masters, instead of encouraging their Faults, by treating them as so many excellent Qualities.

The same good Sense which hinders Courtiers and Men of Quality from being Slaves in England to the Superior Dignity of their Prince, teaches them also how to support their own Quality, without suffering their Grandeur to turn their Heads. We very rarely see here Men magnificently dress'd assuming high Airs of State, speaking in an elevated Tone, talking everlastingly of their Birth, their Dependents, their Horses, strutting a tiptoe, hoisting their Shoulders up, taking Snuff, adjusting their Perukes, and then deciding peremptorily, and with the Air of an Oracle on Things of the utmost Importance, smiling or singing while one is talking to them, and seldom deigning to make an Answer in more than two Words. A Man of this Character, I say, is not commonly met with at London; and when he is, these affected Airs which would make him seem somebody in another place, render him here hateful to the Populace, and ridiculous to his Equals.
the

Ignorance is a Vice which has very few Partizans in this Country, even among Men of Quality. Instead of blushing at a strict Application to the Sciences, they shew the utmost Contempt for such as conceive it a declining the Privilege of Nobility to trouble themselves with more Knowledge than that of being able to read tolerably and write a common Letter. In more Countries than one, a Man that with a certain Air can say a pleasant thing, is look'd upon as a fine Fellow, in England he would be stiled a Blockhead without Mercy, because there Things receive their Value from their Worth; a Lord who can sing and talk Nonsense to a Woman, is in that Country a Coxcomb. He who has these Phrases everlastingly in his Mouth, A Man of my Quality, a Person of my Birth, is laughed at and derided. Had he all the Quality of the Venetian Senate put together, and nothing else to recommend him, he would meet but little Esteem at London.

It is in that Country absolutely necessary to have Merit in order to have Credit. Nobility has indeed Privileges, but those Privileges are merely honorary. A Lord who is incapable of distinguishing himself by his Parts, must console himself with them as well as he can. A Swiss Author introduces a Lord describing his own Situation very emphatically, that is, such a Lord as hath nothing but what he derives rives from his Birth. *It is true, says he, we cannot be arrested for our Debts, but then it is but here and there we can find credit. Instead of an Oath, we say upon our Honours; but to ballance this we are seldom believed: there is indeed a Law to prevent People from speaking ill of us; but if his Lordship is too busy with his Cane, his Lordship may be beat . It is true, dear Isaac, all this must not be literally taken, but however, it is sufficient to shew, that in England, how great soever a Man's Quality is, he must have Merit also to render him considerable. You need not therefore be surprized at seeing more Men of Quality Patrons of the Sciences in this Country than elsewhere; Ambition and the Desire of Glory excite in them quite different Passions than are felt by Men of their Rank in other Countries, where their Heads are turn'd to other Things. A Frenchman thinks himself illustrious enough in right of his Coaches, Horses, Domesticks, Furniture and fine Clothes; an Englishman admits, that these have nothing to do with Merit, and that all these Trifles do not contribute to raise his Character in the least.

There is yet another Reason which forces People of Distinction in this Country to cultivate Sciences and the Belles Lettres. It is the Necessity they are under of understanding ancient and modern Policies, which is a kind of Knowledge for which they find frequent occasion. Not only Lords, but all Men of such a Rank as hope for any Employments, are obliged to be well versed in History and Politics. In England, says an illustrious Author, Men commonly think, and Learning is even in greater Credit there than here. This Advantage is the natural Consequence of their Form of Government; there are in London near seven or eight hundred Persons who have a Right to speak in publick, and to support the Interest of the Nation. At least, five or six thousand pretend to this Honour in their Turns. All the rest pretend to judge of the Behaviour of this People. Every Man may print what he thinks fit on publick Affairs. Thus the whole Nation is under a Necessity of knowing more than any other Nation. One hears nothing talk'd of but the Government of Rome and Athens. A Man is forced, whether he will or will not, to read the Authors who treat of these Things; this Study naturally leads a Man to the Belles Lettres. In short, every Man is a sort of a Statesman. How comes it, that our Magistrates, our Lawyers, our Physicians, our Ecclesiastics, have more Learning, a better Taste, and a greater Share of Wit than the rest of the French Nation? Is it not truly, because their Condition of Life requires a greater Cultivation of the Mind*.
in

* Mura's Letters on the English Nation.

See then, dear Isaac, the essential Cause of the difference there is between English and French Courtiers. The first need nothing to recommend them but Patience, Suppleness, and a little Court-Craft. On the contrary, the latter cannot succeed but in right of superior Knowledge, good Sense and requisite Learning; these, and these only, being the Arts by which Rivals are to be overcome.

Before I finish my Letter, I must take notice to you, dear Isaac, of one of the Privileges of the Nobility in this Country. Whoever ventures to libel them is liable to suffer deeply in his Pocket. This is settled by an express Law †; and I have been told on this Subject a whimsical Story: The Son of a rich Inn-keeper having been lucky enough to please the Wife of a Man of Quality, did not apprehend that
this

* Voltair's Letters, Lett. xx.

† He means the Action of Scandalum Magnatum.

this Law could prove any Bar to his Endeavours in this way. He had the good Luck to succeed in his Amour, and the Lord had the good Luck, if it can be so called, to find it out; upon which he used means to procure a Divorce, but failing of the necessary Proof in the proper Court, he was forced to content himself with recovering Damages against the Inn-keeper's Son: Since this Affair it is a settled Point, that a Man fails in his respect to the Nobility, when he becomes too agreeable to their Wives. However, there are some arch People who scruple not to say, that there are sprightly Fellows who will ogle Women of Quality, tho' at the Hazard of their Fortunes. If the Men of Title in Italy had any Privilege of this sort, I dare say they would be as tender of it as the English are of their Liberty. *

Adieu, dear Isaac, may the God of our Fathers cover thee with Blessings.

London.

* Our Author hath been not a little mistaken in this Matter, which is only the Story of the D. of N. suing Sir John Germaine, who was an Inn-keeper's Son at the Hague, not on the Statute of Scan. Mag. but on an Action of the Case, for criminal Conversation with his Dutcheß.

LETTER CXXXVII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

I Have read, my dear Isaac, the Relation of a Prodigy inserted in an * historical Journal, and I find in it some Things so particular, that I persuade myself you will concur with me in Opinion, that the Facts contained therein are absolutely irreconcilable to Philosophic Speculations, and all the Efforts of the reasoning Faculty. I will first give you a faithful Extract of what I have read, and then my sincere Opinion of the supernatural Things therein contained.

“ We have had in this Country a new Scene of “ Vampirism, which is duly attested by two Officers “ of the Tribunal of Belgrade, who took Cogni“ zance of the Affair on the Spot, and by an Officer “ in his Imperial Majesty’s Troops at Gradischn (in “ Sclavonia) who was an Eye-witness of the Pro“ ceedings,

“ In the Beginning of September there died at “ the Village of Kisilwa, three Leagues from Gra- “ dischn, an old Man of above threescore and two :
 “ three Days after he was buried he appeared in “ the Night to his Son, and desired he would give “ him somewhat to eat. The Son did so, the “ Father eat, and then disappeared. The next

* Mercure Historique et Politique, Octob. 1736. p. 403

“ Day the Son told his Neighbours these Particu“ lars. That Night the Father did not come, but
 “ the next Evening he made him another Visit,
 “ and desired something to eat. It is not known “ whether his Son gave him any Thing or “ not, but the next Morning the young Man “ was found dead in his Bed. The Magi“ strate or Bailiff of the Place had Notice of “ this, as also that the same Day five or six Per“ sons fell sick in the Village, and died one after “ the other. He sent an exact Account of this to “ the Tribunal of Belgrade, and thereupon two “ Commissioners were dispatched to the Village at“ tended by an Executioner, with Instructions to “ examine closely into the Affair. An Officer in “ the Imperial Service, from whom we have this “ Relation, went also from Gradisch, in order to “ examine personally an Affair of which he had “ heard so much. They opened in the first place
 “ the Graves of all who had been buried in six “ Weeks. When they came to that of the old “ Man, they found his Eyes open, his Colour “ fresh, his Respiration quick and strong, yet he “ appeared to be stiff and insensible. From these “ Signs they concluded him to be a notorious Vam- “ pire. The Executioner thereupon by the Com“ mand of the Commissioners struck a Stake thro’
 “ his Heart ; and when they had so done, they “ made a Bonfire, and therein consumed the Car“ casses to Ashes. There was no Marks of Vam“ pirism found on his Son, or on the Bodies of the “ other Persons who died so suddenly.

“ Thanks be to God, we are as far as any “ People can be from giving into Credulity, we “ acknowledge that all the Lights of Physick do “ not enable us to give any Account of this Fact,
 “ nor do we pretend to enter into its Causes.
 “ However, we cannot avoid giving Credit to a “ Matter of Fact juridically attested by compe“ tent and unsuspected Witnesses, especially since “ it is far from being the only one of the kind.

 “ We shall here annex an Instance of the same sort
 “ in 1732, already inserted in the Gleaner, No. 18.

“ In a certain Canton of Hungary, which is cal“ led in Latin Oppida Heidonum, on the other Side
 “ the Tibiscus, vulgarly called the Teyffe; that is “ to say, the River which washes the celebrated “ Territory of Tokay, as also a Part of Transilvania.
 “ The People known by the Name of Heydukes be“ lieve that certain dead Persons, whom they call “ Vampires, suck the Blood of the Living, inso“ much that these People appear like Skeletons, “ while the dead Bodies of the Suckers are so full “ of Blood, that it runs out at all the Passages of “ their Bodies, and even at their very Pores.
 “ This odd Opinion of theirs they support by a “ Multitude of Facts attested in such a Manner, “ that they leave no room for doubt. We shall “ here mention some of the most considerable.

“ It is now about five Years ago, that a cer“ tain Heyduke an Inhabitant of the Village of “ Medreiga, whose Name was Arnold Paul, was “ bruised to Death by a Hay-Cart, which ran over “ him. Thirty Days after his Death, no less “ than four Persons died suddenly, in that manner “ wherein, according to the Tradition of the “ Country, those People generally die who are “ suck'd by Vampires. Upon this a Story was “ called to mind, that this Arnold Paul had told “ in his Life-time, viz. that at Cosova on the “ Frontiers of the Turkish Servia, he had been tor“ mented by a Vampire; (now the established O“ pinion is, that a Person suck'd by a Vampire, “ becomes a Vampire himself, and sucks in his “ Turn,) But that he had found a way to rid him.

“ himself of this Evil, by eating some of the Earth
 “ out of the Vampire’s Grave, and rubbing him“ self with his Blood. This Precaution however “ did not hinder his becoming a Vampire; inso“ much that his Body being taken up forty Days “ after his Death, all the Marks of a notorious “ Vampire were found thereon. His Complexion “ was fresh, his Hair, Nails, and Beard were “ grown; he was full of fluid Blood, which ran “ from all Parts of his Body upon his Shroud. The “ Hadnagy or Bailiff of the Place, who was pre“ sent at the taking of him up, and who was a “ Person well acquainted with Vampirism, caused “ a sharp Stake to be thrust, as the Custom is, “ through the Heart of Arnold Paul, and also “ quite through his Body; whereupon he cried out “ dreadfully as if he had been alive. This done, “ they cut off his Head, burnt his Body, and “ threw the Ashes thereof into the Saave. They “ took the same Measures with the Bodies of those “ Persons who had died of Vampirism, for fear
 “ that they should fall to sucking in their Turns.
 “ All these prudent Steps did not hinder the “ same Mischief from breaking out again about “ five Years afterwards, when several People in “ the same Village died in a very odd manner.
 “ In the space of three Months, seventeen Persons “ of all Ages and Sexes died of Vampirism, some “ suddenly, and some after two or three Days suf“ fering. Amongst others there was one Stano- “ ska, the Daughter of a Heyduke, whose Name “ was Jovitzo, who going to Bed in perfect Health, “ waked in the middle of the Night, and making
 “ a terrible Outcry, affirmed that the Son of a cer“ tain Heyduke whose Name was Millo, and who “ had been dead about three Weeks, had attempt“ ed to strangle her in her Sleep. She continued “ from that time in a languishing Condition, and “ in the Space of three Days died. What this “ Girl had said, discovered the Son of Millo to be “ a Vampire. They took up the Body, and found “ him so in effect. The principal Persons of the “ Place, particularly the Physician and Surgeons, “ began to examine very narrowly, how, in spite “ of all their Precautions, Vampirism had again “ broke out in so terrible a manner. After a “ strict Inquisition, they found that the deceased “ Arnold Paul had not only suck’d the four Per“ sons before mentioned, but likewise several “ Beasts, of whom the new Vampires had eaten, “ particularly the Son of Millo. Induced by these “ Circumstances, they took a Resolution, of dig“ ging up the Bodies of all Persons who had died “ within a certain time. They did so, and a“ mongst forty Bodies, there were found seven“ teen evidently Vampires. Through the Hearts

 “ of these they drove Stakes, cut off their Heads, “ burnt the Bodies, and threw the Ashes into the “ River. All the Informations we have been “ speaking of were taken in a legal way, and all
 “ the Executions were also so performed, as ap“ pears by Certificates drawn up in full Form, at“ tested by several Officers in the neighbouring “ Garrisons, by the Surgeons of several Regiments, “ and the principal Inhabitants of the Place. The “ verbal Process was sent towards the latter End “ of last January to the Council of War at Vi- “ enna, who thereupon established a special Com“ mission to examine into these Facts. Those just “ now mentioned were attested by the Hadnagi “ Barriarar, the principal Heyduke of the Vil“ lage, as also by Battuer, first Lieutenant, of “ Prince Alexander of Wirtemberg, Flickstenger, “ Surgeon Major of the Regiment of Furtemberg,
 “ three

“ three other Surgeons of the same Regiment, and “ several other Persons.”

I thought proper, my dear Isaac, to lay before you all the strange Stories that have been related of Vampires, that you might the better judge of the Matter, and that the Circumstances of one Story might serve to enlighten another. I shall impatiently expect your Sentiments, and in the mean time shall give you my own freely.

There are two different Methods whereby the Falsity of this Opinion, that dead Persons can return and suck the living may be demonstrated ; that is to say, the Fact may be shewn to be impossible. First, by explaining by the means of physical Causes all that is attributed to Vampirism, and secondly, by denying totally the Truth of these Stories, which I take to be the safest and wisest way. But inasmuch as the Names of the Persons who have signed this Relation give such an Authority thereto, as serves to render it credible ; I shall, before I proceed to shew how little Respect is due to these Authorities in Philosophical Matters, admit that several Persons have died of that Malady, which is called Vampirism.

I lay this down as a Principle, that it is possible to find Bodies, which after having been some Days interred, have fluid Blood in their Veins ; I likewise assert that it is an easy Matter for People to fancy that they have been sucked by Vampires, and so to terrify themselves by these Apprehensions, as in a short time to die of Fright : for having their Heads full all Day of these strange Stories, what Wonder is it, if at Night, and in their Dreams, these Ideas should still disturb their Imagination, and produce that Effect which Terror often produces, immediate or consequential Death ? How often have we seen Persons die away on the News of some terrible Misfortune? How frequently has even excessive Joy produced the same Effect?

In examining the Story of the Death of these pretended Martyrs to Vampirism, I discover all the Marks of an epidemic Fanaticism, and I see clearly that the Impressions of their own Fears was the true Cause of their Destruction. Mark the Story of the Heyduke's Daughter; she went to Bed well, awakened in the middle of the Night, cry'd out that she had been attack'd by a Vampire, named a certain dead Person she had been thinking of, continued in a languishing Condition for some Days, and then died. Whoever has Eyes, and ever so little Notion of Philosophy, will easily discern that this pretended Vampirism is the pure Effects of a heated Imagination. Here is a Girl who, by her crying out, pretends to have avoided being suck'd by a Vampire; certain it is that she escaped the three other Nights, when to be sure there were People who sat up with her. Is not this a clear and demonstrative Proof, that she did not die of Vampirism, but of Terror, Apprehension and Melancholy?

Those who have been in Places afflicted with the Plague, know by Experience what strange Consequences Fear can produce. The Moment a Man is a little out of Order, he takes it for granted that he is struck with the epidemick Malady, and this alarms him so much, that 'tis ten to one if he escapes. The Chevalier de Maisin told me at Paris, that being at Marseilles when the Plague raged there, he actually knew an Instance of a Woman's dying with Fear on her Maid's being seized with an Ague, which she took for the Plague. This Woman's Daughter also fell into a mortal Illness from the same Cause. Two other Persons in the same House took their Beds, sent for a Physician,
and

Lett. CXXXVII. The JEWISH SPY. 129
and told him they had the Plague. The same Physician visited the Maid-Servant, and the rest of the Persons who were sick, and assured them that none of them had the Plague, advised them to rise, to go about the House, and to live as they were wont, and not to frighten themselves. But with respect to the Mistress of the Family, his Care was all in vain, for in the space of two Days, as I have told you, she died of mere Apprehension.

Let me now, my Friend, examine the first Relation, That of the young Man who died by being suck'd by his dead Father ; be pleased to consider the Circumstances, and you will see that he died in truth of Fear, of Folly, or of the Vapours. The Story he told his Neighbours the first Morning, is a Proof that his Imagination was disturbed, and that he was excessively frightened. This first Attack of his ill-grounded Fear, served to distemper his Reason, and to render him less able to resist the next Return of his Pannick. Accordingly, when it did surprize him, it produced the Effect which might naturally be expected ; it overcame his animal Spirits, and deprived him of Life. You will take Notice, my dear Isaac, that this did not happen the next Night, very probably for this Reason, because his Neighbours watched with him, and thereby kept up his Courage ; or in other Words parry'd the Attack.

I come next to speak of the dead Bodies which were found full of Blood, their Beards, Nails, and Hair of their Heads grown, and all the other Circumstances. Of all these strange Things, if we admit the Truth of any part, we shall be as complaisant as can be expected ; for to be sure the greatest part of the Circumstances were pure Imagination. All Philosophers know how ready the People in general are, and even what a Propensity there is in some Historians to magnify whatever has the Air of being supernatural. However, not to insist too much upon this, it is far from being impossible to account physically for these Circumstances.

Experience teaches us, that there are certain Earths which have a Property of preserving Bodies put into them for a long Time as fresh as when they were put into the Ground. The Reasons of which have been so often stated, that it would be tedious, and at the same time needless in me to repeat them. At Thoulouse there is a Vault belonging to the Church of a Monastery, where dead Bodies remain so entire, that even after two hundred Years Continuance there, they seem as fresh as when first buried; they set them against the Wall in their ordinary Clothes, and they look as if they were alive. What is still more extraordinary, Bodies buried on the other Side of the Vault, become Food for Worms in a Day or two at most.

As to the growing of the Nails, the Hair, and the Beard, the same Thing is frequently observed in dead Bodies in all places. So long as there remains any Moisture in the Body, we need not be surprized if those Parts grow which require only Moisture to supply them.

The Fluidness of the Blood, and its being found liquid in the Veins, seems the greatest Difficulty; and yet even this may be so well accounted for by physical Causes, as to shut out all Necessity of having recourse to Miracles. With respect to this, I say, that the Heat of the Sun rarifying the nitrous Damps in the Graves, where the Bodies lie, enables thereby many of those nitrous Particles to insinuate themselves into the Body, where entering the Blood,

Blood, and causing a Fermentation, they may dissolve that Coagulum occasioned by Death, and make it by degrees, not flow indeed, but become liquid in the Veins. This is the more probable, because something like it may be performed by a very easy Experiment. For if we boil in a Pipkin two Parts of Milk, with one of Oil of Tartar, the Liquor will become red, because the Salts in the Tartar dissolve the oily Parts in the Milk, and turn it into a kind of Blood; it is true that Blood is naturally of a more florid Colour, but it differs very little in Consistence. There is therefore nothing impossible in this Supposition, that the Juices in the dead Body by nitrous Particles fermenting with them, may furnish a Liquor nearly resembling Blood; especially if we consider that these Juices in their natural State are very oily, and consequently must by such a Fermentation be of a very high Colour.

You see, dear Isaac, that without absolutely denying every particular in the Certificates, it is very possible to rid ourselves of the strangest Circumstances in these Stories. To say the Truth, it would be ridiculous to give any Credit to them, however attested: For either these Vampires actually go out to suck, or they do not. If they go out, then they must be visible, or they must be invisible, as it should seem they are; for upon coming to the Assistance of those who cry out, there is nothing to be seen. It follows then that the Bodies do not go out. This Point being gained, we must suppose that it is the Soul. Now the Soul is either spiritual, or composed of a very subtil Matter; Shall we suppose then, that in this subtil Matter the Blood is carried to the Grave, and there poured into the Body? Is not this sending the Soul of a strange Errand? To say the Truth, my

my dear Isaac, I am ashamed to spend so much Time in exposing Vampirism, and find myself precisely in the Situation of that Nazarene Doctor, who said, that he blushed for those whom he refused, and at the Necessity he was under of speaking to them in such Terms *. I told you at first, that there was very small heed to be given to these wonderful Certificates, which when thoroughly examined, have really very little Authority.

Farewel, Isaac, live well, contented and happy.

London.

L E T T E R CXXXVIII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi, at Constantinople.

THERE are in this Country, dear Isaac, as many different Sects as in Holland. The English are too jealous of their Liberty to submit to the Necessity of thinking in one Way, or to be withheld from striking out now and then, to see what sort of Country the Land of Error is. They will make use of their Reason in all their Actions, and

* Sed jam pudet me ista refellere, dum eos non puderit ista sentire. Cum vero ausi sint etiam ea defendere, non jam eorum, sed ipsius Generis humani, me pudet, cujus aures hæc ferre potuerunt. Aug. Epist. LVI.

and can by no means think of becoming Slaves to the Notions of some particular Divines.

Tho' every Man be at Liberty in England to follow what Religion he pleases, yet what is emphatically called the Church prevails. The King, and all the People of Quality almost are Members thereof, and some of them zealous enough. It is requisite to profess one's self a Churchman in order to possess any Office or Employment in the State in England or Ireland. The very Name implies that it is the chief Faith, and as it were the Religion of the State. The Nonconformists however do not usually call it the Church, or its Members Churchmen, but cavalierly enough the Partizans of the Bishops; for whatever the English may have borrowed from the Sentiments of Calvin, their Common Prayer, and their Church Ceremonies favour not at all of that Divine: on the contrary, they come nearer to the Church of Rome, especially in their Cathedral Worship, which hath a very great Resemblance thereto. The Bishops, who are in Number twenty six, have their Archdeacons, who have Jurisdiction over the Priests in their Dioceses. All the Clergy, of whatever Degree, are very exact in receiving their Tithes, and other ecclesiastical Dues; these, however Popish, they conscientiously retain, and very piously fenced against the Reformation's breaking in here. The Bishops have even a Seat in the House of Lords; but as the Canon Law does not permit them to give their Voices in Matters of Blood, so when their Enemies are to be destroyed, they can do no more than cabal against them.

While the English were yet in the Humour of burning Protestants for the Glory of God, the single Determination of one of these Pontiffs sent a Man to the Stake. At present there is nothing like like this, People of all Religions are safe from Fire, tho' not from the Rage of the Ecclesiasticks. The Priests of the different Sects hate one another mortally, and their ill Humour frequently diffuses itself thro' their Flocks. There have been some Bishops who would have given ten Years Revenue to have indulged themselves their full Swing in persecuting the Nonconformists, as these again, on the other hand, would be infinitely overjoyed, could they but absolutely extinguish Episcopacy, and destroy that priestly Pomp, the Sight of which they bear with so much Pain. For you must know, that notwithstanding the fundamental Points are the same with Churchmen, and with Presbyterians, yet that Heat with which they espouse those Differences, which all of them own to be unessential, is so violent, that it has sometimes come to shedding of Blood. Thus by an incomprehensible Madness, at the same time that the Papists ardently endeavour the Destruction of all Protestants, Protestants themselves contribute to facilitate their Designs by mutually destroying each other, or at least contributing to each other's Destruction, only because they are called by the different Names of Churchmen and Presbyterians. You may very possibly be desirous of knowing what are the Sources of these Divisions; it is by chance in my Power to give you some Account of this Matter, especially in respect to the French and Walloon Presbyterian Refugees in England.

I was going t'other Day with one of my Friends by the French Church, he desired I would go in and hear the Sermon: you know it is a Custom with me to go into the Places of Devotion of all Sects, in order the better to comprehend their Doctrines and their Ceremonies; I therefore readily agreed to his Proposal, and in we went. I was was perfectly ravished with the modest and sober Beginning of the Preacher's Discourse; yet before he had well opened it, I heard a prodigious Noise in the Church. All who were present began to act like the Convulsionists in France, one cough'd, another sneez'd, some shook their Heads, most of them put their Hands to their Hats; but above all, some People in a Gallery over-against me seemed to lose all Sort of Patience, they spread out their Arms, put themselves into such ridiculous Postures that I could not forbear asking my Friend what was the Matter; but guess my Surprise, when on turning towards him, I saw him playing Tricks like the rest. Lord bless me, said I, what is the Matter? Is it thus you behave in a Place of Publick Worship! Let us go out, said he, I find it is impossible for me to keep my Temper, or to avoid giving a publick Testimony of the just Sense I have of the Affront offered to our Church. Upon this up he started, and out he went, followed by at least three Fourths of the Congregation. Pray tell me, said I, when we were in the Street, what this Matter is; Is there in your Religion any Feasts which approach the ancient Bacchanalia, or have your Priests the Power of turning your Heads before they have well opened their Mouths? Ah! that Preacher, said he, bath violated one of our most sacred Rites; I will tell you his Crime; he had the Assurance to preach without putting on his Hat. Bless me, replied I, what great Harm was there in that? Would his Doctrine have been a Grain the worse on this Account? Do you think that having a Hat on alters a Man's Thoughts, or that it gives him clearer or brighter Ideas, than if his Head was uncovered? I begin now to understand what you all meant by clapping your Hands to your Hats; at first I must own that I thought you were all distracted. It were to be

be wished, said my Friend, that we had still had less Patience, and that we had ordered the Man to hold his Tongue; what will the World say, when they shall hear what has passed at our Worship to-day? They will think us a Sort of amphibious Creatures; they will expect next to see us go to the established Church: This comes of the Folly of letting strange Ministers preach without acquainting them with the Rules and Orders of our Congregation.

Surprized at what I heard, I could not help saying, And do you place this among the Number of the Grievances which keep you out of what the People call here the Church? Yes! said he hastily, I do; their Bowing, their Vestments, their Surplices, and their Episcopal Robes are like this, and all impure Rags of Popery. It seems then, returned I, that you dispute warmly about Trifles. How is it possible, that you who look upon all Ceremonies as indifferent, should notwithstanding believe there is any Thing in a Man's wearing a longer or a shorter Garment, in his appearing in a black Robe or a white? Did your Legislator, and his primitive Disciples leave you Patterns for Clothes? Is there any thing in your sacred Books about how many Ells of Stuff are to enter into a Priest's Garment?

My Pleasantries were very far from pleasing my Friend, who was a zealous Presbyterian. I see, says he, you affect to justify the Church, yet let me tell you, that you act in this contrary to the Jews who follow our Custom in their Synagogue. That is true, said I, because it is our Custom, and universally received amongst the Israelites. We act in this respect uniformly in all Countries where the People dress in Wigs, and where they dress in Turbans; amongst the Turks, the Persians, &c. we never uncover our Heads. But we look upon this purely as a Civil Rite, and not at all as a Thing essential to Religion.

You

You do well, replied my Friend, you have a Right to act as you please, and so have we; while there are French and Walloon Presbyterians, there will, Thanks be to God, be found Men who will stick to their own Customs, and preach with their Hats on, in spite of all the lordly Prelates upon Earth. Saying this, he turned about, and left me abruptly, and with an Air of Discontent.

You must not be surprized, my dear Isaac, at this want of Decorum in my Friend, or at the Intemperance of his Zeal. The Presbyterians in general are excessively prejudiced in favour of their Mode of Worship, and of all their Customs. They are morose and very petulant, and have no sort of Complaisance, if you attempt in the veriest Trifle to put them out of their way. The greater Credit their Adversaries have, the greater Obstinacy they put on. It would be an easier Tax to persuade the Jansenists to accept the Bull Unigenitus, than to persuade the Presbyterians to put their Hats on when the Psalms are sung, or to put them off, when they are only read. Behold, dear Isaac, for what Whimfies these People contend. A Man must be very fond of the Title of Nonconformity, who merely for the Sake thereof would refuse to quit such ridiculous Customs.

You must not fancy that the Churchmen in this Country, are a Grain more reasonable, or less whimsical. If one of their Preachers was to put on his Hat, it would put his whole Congregation in a Flame, and they had rather see all the Nonconformists in the Universe perish, than shew them so much brotherly Love and Tenderness as to part with their Surplice, or the several Genuflexions of their Clergy in the Celebration of divine Service. You are an obstinate Crew, say they imperiously to the Presbyterians, who will not be persuaded suaded to listen to the Church in Things which are confessedly indifferent. You are Persecutors, reply the Presbyterians fiercely, inasmuch as you would tyrannically subject us to Customs of human Invention. It is precisely because they are indifferent, that you are inexcusable, because while you confess them to be such, you would compel us to receive and to submit to them, tho' we know this to be a Thing indifferent.

The Dress and Countenances of the Presbyterians, especially of their Preachers, answers exactly their true Character; they walk gravely, and with a very stiff Air; their Heads and Faces are in a manner hid by overgrown Hats, and their Shoulders covered with a most enormous large Cloak. If one of these Reverend Persons was to appear at Paris, he would be taken for some grave old Divine, who by appealing to some future Council, had embarrassed himself with his Bishop, and was in absolute Disgrace at Court.

A Clergyman of the Church is quite another Creature; he is dressed in a light easy Cassock, tied with a Surcingle; over this he wears a large flowing and magnificent Robe, very gracefully gathered on his Shoulders into a hundred Plaits; a good Wig well powdered, or light enough to want none, sets off his Face, and an excellent good Beaver with a comely Hat-band and Rose surmount this. Thus equipped they resemble strongly the better Sort of Ecclesiasticks in France, who pique themselves upon Dress, and are frequently to be met with in great Cities, haughty, superb, and scornful. Such a Clergyman looks down on other Mortals as pitiful Insects scarce worthy of his Attention, considering himself as already a Bishop, and in consequence thereof a Member of the House of Lords. Glad at his Heart to see the Presby-

Presbyterians express a Dislike at his Grandeur, laughing within himself to think that this very Dislike keeps them out of the Road of acquiring it; and instead of desiring to unite him and the rest of the Nonconformists to the Faith he professes, he thinks of nothing but forcing their Obedience, which without Ceremony he practises whenever it lies in his Power. In a word, fierce and untractable, because he is of the established Religion, he would have all Things bend before him, and to paint him to the Life, do but figure to yourself, Isaac, a Jesuit, who to convert all the Protestants in the World, would not part with a single Lamp which burns before the Image of St. Ignatius the Chief and Lawgiver of his Order.

I own that when I left Paris, I thought I had lost for ever the Jansenists and the Molinists, but since my Arrival in England, I have found them again, in the Churchmen and Dissenters, who have copied them so perfectly, that if Miracles were in fashion here, as in France and in Italy, I should not question in the least seeing now and then an English Prelate canonized for having been zealous in persecuting Non Cons, or many Dissenters in Convulsions at the Grave of some Saint Paris of their own Fraternity.

The English make a Jest of the religious Disputes which at this Day divide France, and they have certainly Reason. There cannot be a greater Weakness, or a more flagrant Sign of Superstition amongst any Nation, than their being the Dupes of the Hatred, Ambition, and false Faith of certain bold Ecclesiasticks, who under pretence of enlightening certain Points of Doctrine, disturb Society, and in the End interest the State in their petty Quarrels. After all, are not the English however in the same Condition with the French? Are not not the Church Divines as desirous of inflaming their Zealots against the Nonconformists? If it depended upon them, will they not force all the World to blind Obedience, even tho' it were at the Expence of half Mankind? Are not they infinitely delighted with that Share they have in the Government, and do they not make the utmost use of it they are able? In short, Can there be found a more perfect Copy of the French Jesuit, than in the English High Churchman? Or can two People resemble each other more than the Presbyterian and the Jansenist? These last are equally obstinate in their Opinions; they declaim constantly and loudly against all Honours and Preferments, with which however it is impossible that either should be troubled. They affect a morose Air, a Twang through the Nose in Preaching, a kind of Querpo Dress, are declared Enemies to Pleasure, hate their Enemies devoutly, are excessively ambitious, and cloak all these hopeful Qualities with exterior Piety. Can Mortals resemble one another more perfectly?

You must therefore, dear Isaac, acknowledge, that the English very unjustly reproach the French with the Troubles which Molinism and Jansenism create in their Country. It would be easy for the French to justify themselves by recriminating. I do admit that the Madness of one People cannot justify the Madness of another, but however it may serve to excuse it. Every where if you find Divines, you find amongst them Ambition, Jealousy, Vanity, and of consequence Disputes and Persecution. The common People but too readily adhere to different Opinions, just as they strike them. They have neither Sense enough to fathom them, nor Prudence enough to avoid them. We need not then be astonished that they follow blindly the Guides they have made choice of. At London the State acts with respect to the Church and the Presbyterians, just as at Paris between the Molinists and the Jansenists, and always without knowing why it inclines rather this way than that. If there were none but Philosophers and Divines in the World, the latter would certainly be obliged to abandon their Disputes for want of finding Disciples to maintain them.
Guides

Farewell, dear Isaac, live happy and content, and may the God of our Fathers remove far from thee a pertinacious disputing Spirit.

London.

L E T T E R CXXXIX.

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE English, my Friend, are persuaded, that with respect to the Sciences they excel all other Nations. They imagine that Nature hath furnished them with Talents, which she hath denied to other People. When they are told that there is no convincing Reason appears in Justification of this their Assertion; and that there is something very odd in supposing that a Man born ten Leagues off their Shore, or indeed that any two Men born ten Leagues asunder, should not have as much Wit the one as the other; they presently run you over a List of their celebrated Authors, characterize each of them in a pompous manner, and then put the Question; Why, if the Thing be not as they say, there are not as many great Men found in any other Nation? Such as dispute unfairly with the English, and such as cannot get over their natural Prejudices, endeavour to rid themselves of this Difficulty, by denying that the Authors of whom the English boast are at all superior to those of other Nations. But if we speak truly and sincerely, we must confess that this Objection is not easily shifted off. It must on the contrary be owned, that the English have amongst them Writings, which seem to have been dictated by Persons of more than human Capacity. Whoever has read Locke and Newton with such Application as is necessary, in order to taste the Excellency of their Writings, cannot but be convinced that there are among the English certain learned Persons who think more freely, and more solidly than the Learned in other Nations.
and

I know, dear Isaac, that the Liberty which the People enjoy here, gives a certain Hardiness and Elevation of Mind which is not to be found in many Countries. If we will have Men Philosophers, we must allow them Liberty of Thought, and the free Use of their Reason. It would be as wild and as ridiculous to look for such a Person as Locke in Spain, as to think of making an Orange grow as happily, and to the same Degree of Perfection in a little Tub as in the open Air, and in a Soil fit for it. But if there are Nations hampered and oppressed, there are also some other Nations not a Grain less free than the English, and who might therefore give the same Loose to their Imaginations as they do. Whence then comes it, that even amongst them there are not Philosophers equal to the English?

You

You see, dear Isaac, that some Reasons there are which seem at least to favour the Opinion the Inhabitants of this Country have taken up, that there is more Wit, and a deeper Reach in Science amongst them than amongst their Neighbours; but after all, these Reasons are rather specious than solid: For if Things are searched to the Bottom, we shall find, that there are among other Nations Persons of as great and shining Parts, as amongst the English, tho' they have not written such perfect Pieces. What I advance on this Subject will appear a Paradox, however there is nothing more certain. In the time that Philosophy was obscured by the dark Mists thrown thereupon by the Commentators of Aristotle and the Schoolmen, the English were in the same Condition with their Neighbours, as much blinded, and cramped in their Discoveries as they. All the Force of their Imaginations did not set them at Liberty; they were as much the Slaves of Aristotle, and as much in Love with the essential Forms, which was the Jargon of his Disciples, as those whom they now excel; they submitted to the Yoke of the Romish Divines, and had Schoolmen amongst them as well as elsewhere. A Frenchman, in those Days of Darkness, had the Courage to refuse paying Homage to this Idol. He did more, he wrote against its Worship; and Gassendi, by his learned Dissertations against Aristotle, became the Fore-runner of Descartes, the Restorer of true Philosophy, and the great Scourge of the Peripateticks. Mankind after having been so long plunged amidst Visions and Chimæras, began on a sudden to use their Reason, and to examine Opinions before they received them. In consequence of this a Multitude of Discoveries equally surprizing and useful, succeeded to lying Tales and gross Puerilities, Nature's ture's abhorring a Vacuum was found to be a mere Whim, the Air appeared to be a heavy Body, Telescopes were invented, Geometry was extended much farther than it had ever been; and by habituating themselves to Reason, Men went insensibly far greater Lengths than at the first themselves could have hoped.

While these happy Revolutions were made in the Republick of Science in France, what passed in England? Little; one might say, nothing. Hobbes, the Friend and Admirer of Gassendi, was almost the only great Philosopher in this Country. But what a Difference was there between Gassendi and Hobbes? His Works*, tho' they have in them good Things, may yet be appealed to in proof of the Superiority of the French Author. We see in them no established System supported by persuasive Arguments; in many Places he is very hard, and in others not at all to be understood. Where he seems to make Matter the first Cause of all Things, he seems to be below Spinoza; where he asserts God to be the Creator of the World, he is by no means equal to Descartes, who, to say the Truth, opened the Eyes of the English Literati.

No sooner they saw their Errors, than they began to make extraordinary Uses of the Lights they had received, and perfected many Things which others had but begun; they did that for succeeding Generations, which the Disciples of Descartes had done for them; that is to say, they put Knowledge into a proper Train, and left it to be farther cultivated by their Posterity.

* Elementorum Philosophiæ sectio prima de Corpore. See also Prælectiones sex ad professores Savilianos. And another Book, entituled, De Homine, sive Elementorum Philosophiæ Sectio secunda.

I make no Difficulty of affirming, that there wants as much Quickness of Thought, and as great Strength of Genius to distinguish the Road to Truth in the midst of Errors, as to pursue that Rout happily when once it is discovered. I do admit, that Newton is much superior both to Descartes and Gassendi. But if the English Philosopher had lived at the same time they did, it is possible he might not have gone so far. Consider, my Friend, that the first Principles of Newton's Philosophy, are the same which Gassendi established on the Ruin of Peripateticism. The Necessity of a Void which had been so long exploded, and almost forgotten for twelve hundred Years, was first demonstrated by the Gallick Sage. It is on this Void so strangely recovered, that Newton founds those Reasons of his, whereby he shews the Positions laid down by Descartes to be impossible. And if by this means he has vanquished the Cartesians, it must be allowed that he does it by virtue of the Force borrowed from Gassendi.

I am satisfied, my dear Isaac, that if we reflect attentively we shall see no Cause to allow this Claim the English put in, to Superiority of Genius over all other Nations. It must be acknowledged that they are actually the greatest Philosophers in the World. But as I have shewn they owe this in some Measure to the French, so it is not impossible that this Nation in its Turn may hereafter produce some great Man who may not only equal, but even exceed the illustrious Newton. But with respect to such as to defeat this Claim deny the Excellence of the English Philosophers, we must necessarily ascribe this to Blindness owing either to Prejudice or to Ignorance. In order to be assured of this, we need only compare the Sages of Eng- land with those whom their Adversaries oppose to them, and the Truth will clearly appear.

Descartes destroyed the Chimæras of the Schoolmen ; he taught Mankind how to discover the Errors of the Ancients, and thereby pointed out the Means of discovering his own. He made a great Progress in Geometry ; and we owe to him the Application of Algebra to Curves. He wanted but little of perfecting Dioptricks, which in his Hands became in a manner a new Science. He made use in this Branch of Science of that Geometrical Turn and Quickness of Invention with which Heaven had blessed him, and which he had heightened by a most assiduous Application. Behold the mighty Talents of this Man, but remember at the same time his Defects. He was deceived in his Notions of the Soul. His Proofs of the Being of a God are not always either just or evident. Innate Ideas, which he obstinately maintained, have not the least Appearance of Truth. He has advanced some Errors about the Laws of Motion and the Nature of Light. He has done still more, he has adapted those Puerilities, and that playing with Words, with which he reproached the Schoolmen. He treats his own Term indefinite exactly as they were wont to use their Terms, alledging that Space and Matter are not either finite, or infinite. In fine, he would persuade us that his Belief was that God could change the Essence of Things.

Newton did not only make use of the Lights, but of the Faults of Descartes ; he went as far beyond the Point where he left Geometry as Descartes had done beyond that Point where he found it. In this respect I must own, that the Merit is equal in each of our Philosophers. But at the same time it must be acknowledged, that Newton is a much greater Geometrician than Descartes, and in all the other Parts of Philosophy he has the same Advantage. One may say that Newton has discovered a new World, and found the Means of explaining the most abstruse Things. He has shewn the Errors of Descartes as to the Nature of Light, and which is much more, he has substituted in their stead, Principles that are true, and which are demonstrated to be so by many Experiments. He has destroyed all his Vortices ; he has shewn the Impossibility of their Existence, he has substituted in their Place Attraction, the Effects of which he has demonstrated, and calculated its Proportions. 'Tis to this Philosopher the Universe stands indebted for that prodigious Knowledge which he brought to Light. It was Newton who taught all the Learned, to their no small Amazement, that a Tendency to the Center was the sole Cause that Bodies weigh in Proportion to their Matter ; and that to the same Cause was owing the Motion of Planets and Comets. If it were possible to believe that any Man might remain unequalled, one would be tempted to suppose it was this Philosopher, who has so clearly manifested the Laws of Nature. At least, it must be acknowledged, that if any one hereafter should arise capable of rivalling this great Man, such Philosophers as we have at present in the World are infinitely his Inferiors.
and

Some very learned Men, and above all the Cartesians, affect to compare Mallebranche with Locke. I find, dear Isaac, the same Difference between these Philosophers, or at least as great a one as between Newton and Descartes. Mallebranche in his sublime and extravagant Illusions appears rather a Poet than a Philosopher. He aim'd too high, and instead of reaching Heaven as he intended, he has got but half way. So that he can neither discover what he endeavours to find out, nor, by his Height, can he penetrate the Secrets of Men. He admits innate Ideas, and also others by which we see all Things in God. He could not persuade himself that the Existence of Bodies could be demonstrated. In a word, his Philosophy is no more than an ingenious Romance, which is sometimes very unintelligible.

Locke always wise, and always studious of Truth, lays down Principles perfectly right, draws Consequences from them which are strictly just, is exact in all his Proofs, and has displayed all the hidden Secrets of the human Understanding. He has taught the Learned not to decide on any thing which is not thoroughly known. Before his time Philosophers had given us their own Visions on the Nature of the Soul for Truths, he has destroyed these Chimæras, ruined the Doctrine of innate Ideas, and demonstrated to us that all our Ideas are derived to us from our Senses. Having anatomized as it were the Causes of the human Reason, and exposed to Mortals all the Knowledge it is possible to hope of the Essence of the Soul, he has made them observe with equal Candor and Sagacity, that they never could have comprehended the Nature of the human Mind, if God had not been pleased to grant to a material Being the Faculty of thinking.

Consider, dear Isaac, how much more certain, more natural, and if I may be allowed the Expression, less rarified his Sentiments are than those of Mallebranche. Compare the Candor and Sincerity of the English Metaphysician with the Presumption and Pride of this Frenchman. He not only bounded the Power of the Divinity with respect to the Souls of Men, but adopted a System as ridiculous as it is unsustainable with respect to those of Beasts, whom he would have to be mere Machines, like to Clocks, eating without Pleasure, roaring without Pain, neither desiring nor fearing any thing. Certainly, my Friend, Mallebranche must have had a great deal of Vanity; if he fancied that it was in his Power to induce Men to take up with such Dreams as these. I know very well that he did but follow Descartes who invented them, but he is nothing the less blamable for that, he ought not to have embraced, but to have rejected them. But how came he to take into his Head that Matter was susceptible of Thought; he, I say, who admitted the Existence of Bodies out of mere Complaisance, and who found fault with his Master for not absolutely denying it. In order to be fully convinced, said he, that there are Bodies, it ought not only to be demonstrated that there is a God, and that God will not deceive us, but also that God has assured us, that he has effectually created them, which I do not find proved in any of the Works of M. Descartes. God informs the Understanding, and obliges us to afford our Assent two ways: By Evidence, and by Faith. I admit that Faith obliges us to own that there are Bodies, but as for any Evidence I see it not. Nor do I think there is any sufficient to enforce our Belief.* Do you believe, my Friend, that Locke would have ever attempted to prove, that there is nothing exists but God, and our Minds? No, no, he was too wise to amuse himself with such blind Illusions.
of

Farewel, dear Isaac, live happy and content, and never become the Votary of any Philosophy, which is not warranted by Reason.

London.

* Recherche de la Verité, Eclaircissement sur la 1. Livre, p. 499.

LETTER CLX.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

IN my last Letter, dear Isaac, I gave you some Account of the English Philosophers. In this I propose to continue that Account, and to give you some Ideas of the other learned Men of that Country. You are acquainted with the Works of the famous Chancellor Bacon. He was in some sort the Precursor of Descartes and Gassendi. One may safely say, that he foretold that the Ruin of Scholastick Impertinencies was at hand. He saw the Imperfection of that Philosophy, and was the first who pointed out the Means of redressing it*.

A

* He very fully proved, that the Philosophy of Aristotle did not deserve to be preferred before the Systems of other ancient Authors; that it had been long hated and despised by the Greeks and other Heathen Nations, and never found Admirers but in times of profound Ignorance when the Sciences were utterly neglected. Quod vero putant Homines in Philosophia Aristotelis magnum utique consensum esse; cum post illam editam Antiquorum Philosophiæ cessaverint et exoleverint; ast apud tempora, quæ sequuta sunt, nil melius inventum fuerit; adeo ut illa tam bene posita et fundata videatur, ut utrumque tempus ad se traxerit: Primo, quod de cessatione Antiquarum Philosophiarum post Aristotelis opera edita Homines

A Protestant of my Acquaintance was saying to me the other Day that Savonarola prepared the Way for Luther, Calvin, and the other Reformers, and that Bacon had done the same for the Philosophers of our times. Fortune, said he, seems to take a Pleasure in persecuting these Precursors as you call them ; Savonarola was hanged, and Bacon fined, and lost his Office by Judgment of the House of Peers. The English value the Moral Essays of this Author at a high Rate. They have reason for so doing ; these Essays are indeed very good, but they are by no means equal in point of Beauty or of Delicacy, to the Essays of Michael de Montagne. As much as the Physical and Metaphysical Philosophers of the English transcend the French Literati in the same kind ; so great is the Difference between the French Scepticks and the English Writers in that Way. No Author of this Country ever came up to Montagne, much less to Bayle. I very much doubt whether they ever had a Writer possessed of such a prodigious Fund of Erudition as that Philosopher enjoyed, and who had the inimitable Faculty of treating the most abstruse Questions in so entertaining a manner, as to make them agreeable to Men, the World, and even to Ladies themselves.

You know, dear Isaac, that the English have no Historian comparable to Titus Livius, to Tacitus, Homines cogitant id falsum est ; diu enim postea, usque ad tempora Ciceronis et secula sequentia, manserunt opera veterum philosophorum. Sed temporibus insequentibus, ex inundatione Barbarorum in imperium Romanum, postquam Doctrina Humana velut naufragium perpeffa esset ; tum demum philosophiæ Aristotelis et Platonis tanquam tabulæ ex materia leviora, et minus solida per fluctus temporum servatæ sunt. Bacon Novum Organum Scientiarum, Lib. 1. cap. LXXVII. p. 298.

to Salust, to Father Paul, to de Thou, or even to Father Daniel. Is it not a surprizing thing that Party-Spirit should more strongly influence this whole Nation than it does the Jesuits themselves. Of late Years Burnet took it into his Head to imitate de Thou, but we see plainly that he had it in his Head only ; for in point of Exactness, Method, and Purity of Stile, he comes not near him ; not to speak of his Partiality, with which all Parties reproach him. They tell us, that in his first Volume there are not above five or six Characters, and his own is placed at the Head of them all. This Criticism however may be unjust, because it is possible the Defect may not proceed from any Malignity in the Historian, but from the Want of proper Subjects for Panegyrick. In a word, it would be a difficult thing to pick out of the English History any two Reigns so corrupt and tyrannical, as those which he has painted out. However that be, this we know for certain, that a Whig never keeps within Bounds when he writes of a Tory Administration, and that the Tories again are not a grain more modest, or more reasonable in their Representations of the Whigs.

The Authority of English Historians is on a Level with those who wrote in France under the Reigns of Charles the Ninth, and Henry the Third. And it would be a difficult thing ever to find in this Country Persons capable of Writing what Posterity may give an entire Credit to. There seems to be two Causes for this. The first is the Hatred of opposite Parties ; one Part of the Nation is at all times the sworn Enemy of the other. The second is that Presumption and good Opinion which all the English Writers have of themselves. They cannot find in their Hearts to allow other Nations any Advantages which appear to them destructive of of their own Glory. If they disguise without Scruple, and even falsify such Facts as happen under their own Eyes to serve their Party-Purposes, how much more ready must they be to misrepresent what happens abroad, when it does not suit them to tell the Truth?

If the English have no good Historians, it is made up to them by their excellent Poets. You are acquainted, dear Isaac, with the Paradise lost of Milton. - This Poem has not all the Beauties of the Aeneid, but I confess I like it much better than the Jerusalemme liberata of Tasso; to me it seems that the English Poet has made a much better use of Religion than the Italian. I do not think that we can find either in Virgil or in Homer any thing more sublime than the Portrait Milton has given us of the Deity making war on the rebellious Angels. He says, the Almighty took his Arms from Terror.

There is something very majestick in this Idea, and if one dares to bring the Divinity like a Hero into the Field of Battle, one cannot certainly give him a better Squire than Terror, whom this Bard assigns him.

Waller is a Poet very far below Catullus, and yet very much superior to Voiture. His Writings are gallant and full of Beauties, but faint and languishing, at least sometimes; his Verse having neither the Brightness, nor the Beauty of La Fontaine, at the same time that it wants the unnatural Flights of Guarini. In short, he has not quite the Merit of the French Author, nor quite so many Faults as the Italian.

Pope is without Contradiction one of the greatest Poets in the Universe. One may, indeed one ought to look upon him as a formidable Rival to Boileau, Corneille, Racine, Virgil and Homer. This last Author is perhaps more perfect in his English Translation, than in the Original. I cannot think that there is any thing in Poetry more ingenious, more arch, and more gallant than his Poem of the Rape of the Lock. The Lutrin of Boileau is a stronger and more manly Piece, but it is very far from being so pleasant. They assure me in this Country, that Pope was not above twenty Years of Age when he composed that charming Poem. The noble Description given us by Virgil of the Employments of deceased Heroes in the Elysian Shades, does not surpass Pope's pleasant Picture of the Amusement of the Ladies after their Decease.

Think not, when Woman's transient Breath is fled,
That all her Vanities at once are dead:
Succeeding Vanities she still regards,
And tho' she plays no more, o'erlooks the Cards.
Her joy in gilded Chariots, when alive,
And love of Ombre, after Death survive.
For when the Fair in all their Pride expire,
To their first Elements the Souls retire:
The Sprites of fiery Termagants in Flame,
Mount up, and take a Salamander's Name.
Soft yielding Minds to Water glide away,
And sip, with Nymphs, their elemental Tea.
The graver Prude sinks downward to a Gnome,
In search of Mischief still on Earth to roam.
The light Coquettes in Sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the Fields of Air.

It must be acknowledged, dear Isaac, that it is simply impossible to conceive the Reveries of the Cabalists better applied, than they are by him, in order to form a just and delicate Critique on the Fair Sex.

All the different Characters of Women are exactly described in this Account of their Amusements ments after Death, and by a Stroke familiar to great Masters, the Poet, tho' he supposes them dead, paints them so to the Life, that nothing can be either more entertaining or more instructive.

The Earl of Rochester hath written several Satires in a Stile as nervous and as beautiful as that of Boileau. He had indeed a strong and piercing Wit, a brisk and lively Imagination. He lived like Petronius, and died like La Fontaine. He piqu'd himself through the Course of his Life on maintaining the Character of a Free-Thinker. Some time before he went out of the World however, he thought fit to change his Sentiments entirely. The fear of Death, and of the Consequences that might attend it, astonished him. In his last Moments he had recourse to a Divine. But in order to save his Reputation as a Philosopher, he chose to capitulate rather than surrender at Discretion. However, after some Conferences with the Doctor, he yielded, sign'd whatever was thought fit, and sacrificed even his dear Philosophy, after all the pains he had taken to preserve it. He acknowledged all his Errors, and a little after his Decease Dr. Burnet published an Account of this extraordinary Conversion.

This, dear Friend, is the ordinary Custom of Atheists. While they enjoy perfect Health, they will not forsooth believe that there is a God, or at least they do their utmost not to believe it, because they imagine that ridding themselves of this Belief, they may plunge with greater Security into Vice. But when they are ready to leave the World; their false Philosophy vanishes, and they throw themselves into the Arms of those who offer their Assistance to dispel the Horrors of their Hearts. They become then as submissive, as before they were incredulous. There is scarce any thing thing of which they may not be persuaded in these their last Hours. They take on trust whatever is said unto them, resume all the Prejudices of which they fancied themselves cured for ever ; witness those weak Creatures who have ordered themselves to be cloathed in the Habits of Monks, and directed that they should be so interred.

It is not Reason, it is Fear and Terror that makes a Man make such a Change as this on the Verge of Life. To be convinced of this, one need only reflect on the constant Custom of these Persons, which is to die in the Religion in which they were born. If their Conversions were Fruits of Conviction, they would in this case act as others do in their full Health, who often see cause to alter their religious Opinions, and to live in another Faith than that which they received in their Childhood : With how much Justice then, dear Isaac, may we despise a Man who all his Life long refuses to acknowledge the most evident Truths, and on a sick Bed condescends to resume the most ridiculous Prejudices ?

Besides the Poets of whom I have been speaking, there have been many others who deserve the Esteem of Men of Parts. The English are by no means deficient in Dramatick Poets. I shall very speedily give you my Thoughts on their Theatre.

It is not at all surprizing that Poetry hath been carried such a Length in this Nation. Men of the first Quality have not disdained to become Followers of the Muses. My Lord Roscommon, the Duke of Buckinghamshire, the Earl of Dorset, and many other Persons of an elevated Rank have written Pieces which give them, with Justice, the Title of great Poets. These Examples have excited the Envy and Ambition of private Men, every body naturally imitates the Grandees of his Country, and it is the Happiness of the English to have always amongst them Men of Quality of distinguished Merit, passionately fond of Glory and the Belles Lettres. To be in the Mode here, there is no Necessity of learning ridiculous Grimaces, and an affected Laugh, or a contemptuous Disregard for the Sciences, since whoever would pretend to treat as Pedants all such as devote themselves to Learning and to Books, would be thought dull stupid Creatures, and become as ridiculous as they would endeavour to make others.
and

Before I finish this Letter, I must take notice of one of those amiable Wonders, one of those pleasing Prodigies, with which once in twenty Ages, Providence is pleased to amaze Mankind. This Phænomena so favourable to England and the Sciences, is the present Queen Consort. This Princess is not only free from all the Foibles of her Sex, but is also unblemished by any of those slight Failings which we discern in the greatest Men. She is a Hercine, but a Philosophick Hercine. Her Grandeur hinders not her having all the Kindness, Tenderneſs, and Affability that can be wished, neither do the necessary Cares of a Crown prevent her cultivating and protecting the Sciences. Her Liberalities are constantly afforded to the Unhappy, but of the unfortunate Learned she is particularly tender.

It must appear surprizing to you, Isaac, that so many Talents, and so great Virtues should centre in one Person; be assured however, that all the Praises I bestow, are much inferior to what that Princess deserves. You know that the Lustre of a Throne is not apt to dazzle me. My Philosophick Eyes can through that Splendor discern the Truth, which when I cannot divulge with Honour, I keep a profound Silence. I leave to the Writers of Dedications the Trade of praising the Great to an extravagant Degree, in order to acquire some very moderate Pension. I am willing to grant the same Indulgence to a Poet; the Muses have for a long time prostituted their Praises, they may now do it by Prescription. How many Tyrants, how many Drivellers, how many illustrious Good-for-Nothings have they commended? But never can I admit that a Philosopher should debase himself so far as to betray the Truth, and offer Incense to an Idol, the Worthlessness of which he knows.

Writers

Farewel, dear Isaac, live content and happy, and write me an Answer some time or other.

London.

L E T T E R CXLI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE English have certain Customs, dear Isaac, which appear to me as idle as any that I have observed amongst other Nations. I was invited the other Day to assist at the Funeral of a Citizen, and I confess to you that I found it almost impossible to penetrate into the Reason of their Ceremonies, which seemed to me as extraordinary as those I had observed at Paris, on the like Occasion.

As

As soon as a Man expires in this Country, they strip him with all imaginable Care of every thing made of Linen. A Mohammedan is not more careful in washing a dead Body, a Jew in closing its Issues, or a Papist in muttering his superstitious Prayers over it, than the English are in putting on a Woollen Shroud. There are a great Number of these sort of Vestures always to be had ready made, great Numbers of People gaining their Livelihood thereby. It is forbidden to use about a dead Body any Material which is not of Woollen; and if even Cotton, or flaxen Thread be employed, it is considered as a Crime against the State. I was exceedingly surprized, when I first heard of this Custom, but when I came to understand the Reason of it, I was very far from condemning the English. The Intention of the Law which forbids burying in Linen is to encourage the Consumption of Woollen Goods. I must confess, that it is scarce possible to carry a Concern for Trade farther, than to make the very Dead interest themselves in it. This without doubt is a home Push, and if the rest of their Funeral Customs were as well founded, I should not pretend to criticise them, but should as readily approve them as soon as I understood their Causes. But there are many, of which they do not only find themselves at a loss to assign the Reason, but also freely admit that they scarce know any End that they have.

When a dead Man has been attended by his Woollen Valet de Chambre, and is equipt with a fine or a coarse Sui according to his Degree; for the Christians, you know, carry their Vanity even to their Graves; they leave him for two or three Days in the middle of his Apartment, to give him time to come to Life again if he shall so please. I cannot attribute to any other Cause this Custom of keeping a dead Body two or three Weeks, sometimes till it be putrified. If this be the true Reason of the Custom, then I am persuaded that the Heads of Families first brought it up, and that their Children had no share therein. For many of them would to my knowledge look not a little out of Humour, if from time to time some of these dead Folks should take it into their heads to live again, and in consequence thereof quit their Shrouds.
of

It appears to me, dear Isaac, that notwithstanding these Precautions, for fear any such should be buried alive, People are notwithstanding easier on the Article of the Loss of their Relations than in any other. When the Deceased has shewn an obstinate Resolution to remain where he is, they nail him up in his Coffin, and when this is carried to the Grave, it is covered with a large black Pall bordered with white. This Covering is so wide, that six Men can stand underneath it, without either discovering themselves, or any part of the Coffin's being exposed to view; these Christians of the Reformed Religion pretend hereby to do honour to the Dead. I should have easily guessed this, if I had not been told it, having observed that all the European Nations, except the Turks, take a great Pride in seeing certain Pieces of Stuff or Silk born up by Persons appointed for that Purpose. This we see in respect to the Robes of Kings and other Sovereign Princes; Counsellors of Parliament at Paris have likewise Train-Bearers, and so have Priests in their Processions. But Women are solicitous above all in this respect, and as if their Honour lay chiefly in their Tails, when they are of a certain Rank, expect to have them born up after them. Surely, Isaac, there is something thing very pleasant in this. But to return to the English Funerals.

The Coffin thus covered with its sable Veil is preceded by a certain Number of dismal-looking Fellows, who look like so many Serjeants, each with a black Staff in his Hand tipp'd with Silver; next march the Parsons with a slow and solemn Motion; the Relations of the deceased close the Procession, and now and then appear extremely sorrowful. At length the Body comes to the Church, there it is set down for a while. In the mean time there is a Sermon preached, in which the Praises of the dead Person are not forgotten. They likewise take this Opportunity of receiving certain Fees on account of the Permission of the Corpse's entering the Church with the black Pall or Covering before mentioned. Each Parish has three, of different Prices. The English Churchmen, tho' they no longer talk of the Fire of Purgatory, keep up however a good many Money-getting Ceremonies in Funerals, and have only changed the Romish Prayers for the Dead into very harmless Compliments on their Memory. In this respect, I cannot but commend their Decency and Candor. They don't think it proper to take Church-Dues, without returning some way or other Church Favours.

When the Corpse is interr'd, the People return in the same Order to the House. There they give them Wine, white and red, and sometimes burnt with Spices; every one takes a little to comfort him for the Loss of his Friend, and the Women drink a Glass or two in order to keep up their Spirits.

I find these Customs altogether as ridiculous as those of the Papists, tho' I confess they are a little more cheerful. Instead of doleful lamentable Psalms, Psalms, they content themselves with a short Sermon, and in the room of the Popish Holy Water, these Churchmen have wisely brought in a Glass of Wine for themselves. One may well enough compare the Popish Burials to the Ceremonies of Magicians employed in calling up departed Shades; whereas those of the Church of England differ nothing from the Feasts of People in good Humour, Compliments and good Cheer are here united; and in comparing Folly with Folly, I must own that which entertains is much more excusable than that which afflicts me.

People of Distinction in this Country are buried in the same manner as at Paris; they are carried in a Hearse attended by several Coaches full of Mourners and Friends. In this manner they are conducted to the Churches, and placed in the Vaults belonging to their respective Families.

I must own, my Friend, that I am exceedingly astonished, on considering the Ceremonies used by the Churchmen in this Country, at their exclaiming so loudly at the Papists. They are less exempt than they fancy from those Reproaches which they bestow so liberally upon others. In my Opinion, the Presbyterians are less in danger of being retorted upon in this respect. Their Ceremonies are fewer and more simple, which renders them less shocking in the Eyes of a Philosopher. Give me leave for a Moment to suppose myself a Papist. I will undertake, says I to a Churchman, to prove that you have Customs of as extraordinary a Nature as ours, and that the Thing with which you most reproach us, and which in Fact never did happen amongst us, hath fallen out frequently amongst you. How often have your Doctors, and your Historians; nay, and even your Poets, made themselves merry at our Expence on Pope Joan? "How happy, say
"you

“ you, was the Church when under this Female “ President? A pleasant Successor this of St. Peter!
 “ Would not the Apostle, think you, look down from “ Heaven with Amazement at the Sight of a Woman “ in his Chair? What could the People say when “ she was brought to Bed of a little Popeling in a publick “ Place?” These Pleasantries, however, belong more properly to the English Church than to the Roman, as I will undertake to prove. For take which Side you will: Suppose that with the Learned of these Times you give up the Story as a Forgery, and acknowledge that there never was such a Thing as a Female Pope, you must then grant, that the Clamours made on this Subject are very ill founded, and you must likewise allow, that this is a shrewd Sign of your Readiness to charge us with Things of which we never were guilty. On the other hand, if you persist in believing that this Tale of a Female Pope is really no Fiction, I will then undertake to prove to you on your own Principles, that this could not possibly bring any Dishonour on the Church, since what according to your own Account, hath but once happened amongst us, has been however frequent enough amongst you. The Sovereign is constantly allowed to be Head of the Church in England. What think you then during the Reigns of Elizabeth and Anne? Had you not then Female Popes? You can’t deny the Matter of Fact, which exposes you to these Pleasantries? Did not the Marshal de Biron boast that he had seen the Head of the Church in England dance.
 I know very well, that your Authors stoutly dispute this Point, maintaining positively that this Princess did no more than play on the Harpsichord. Be that as it will, you must admit that she might have danced, if she had so pleased; nay, she might have gone farther, and imitated Pope Joan in all Things. Let me ask you then; Would you have thought the worse

of your Religion for such an Accident? Without doubt you would answer, that the Failings of a particular Person cannot prejudice any Church. I also, on my Part, alledge the same Thing, and I defy you to find a Reply; move which way you will; I shall always have it in my Power to recriminate. But, say you, when our Queens happen to be at the Head of our Religion, it is a mere Accident; they enjoy an empty Title, and perform none of the Functions. Now this is what I absolutely deny, for they have a direct Authority over the Clergy, and in Quality of Heads of the Church, perform all that any other Heads of the Church do at any other time. Before you can rid yourself of this Objection, you must shew how Kings are Heads of the Church, and wherein the Difference lies between their Exercise of that Office, and the manner in which it is discharged when you have a Queen Regent.

When the Provinces of Zealand and Holland offered by their Ambassadors to acknowledge Queen Elizabeth for their Sovereign, she rejected that Offer, and told them withal, that they were in the wrong to revolt about so small a Matter as the Mass. If you won't assist thereat, said she, as a Ceremony of the Church, go to it as to a Play. Suppose I took it into my Head to act such a Scene before you, would you run away? I know you would not, but stand still and look on. You see I am in a manner ready, for I am dress'd in a white Robe, and that is one of the main Things in the Business.

Do you believe that a Queen who was so well versed in a Ceremonial of another Church, as to have been able to have gone through it in case of need, should be at all at a loss about the Rites of her own Church, of which she was the Head, or at all diffident of her Right of performing them, if she had so thought fit.

fit. For my part, I believe that if Elizabeth had taken it into her Head to preach, none of her Subjects would have had any Pretence to censure her Sermons. This, Sir, is my way of talking to English Churchmen.

Consider, dear Isaac, that different Sects attack each other in the weakest Parts, without considering whether they are not guilty themselves of the same Faults which they impute to their Adversaries. The Presbyterians indeed may be allowed to throw Pope Joan in the Dish of the Papists, because they stand in no fear of a Recrimination. The Church in this Country seems to be the Mean between that of Rome, and the Conventicle of Geneva. The Members of that Communion have not so many Ceremonies as the former, neither have they the Simplicity of the latter; they seem to be afraid of doing too much on one Side, or of doing too little on the other.

Farewel, dear Isaac, live content and happy.
London.

L E T T E R CXLII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

A Very melancholy Affair, my dear Isaac, of which I was unluckily a Spectator a few days ago, compels me to make some serious Reflections on

on the force of Prejudice, since I am convinc'd how far wrong Notions and a false Love of Glory can carry Men.

One of my Friends propos'd to me going to see a very pleasant Sight: I asked him very seriously whether there was any thing in it curious. There cannot, answer'd he, be any thing more entertaining, and besides there are excellent Rope-Dancers. The Gravity with which my Friend spoke, sufficiently perswaded me that I should have no reason to be displeased with the Sight, and therefore I readily came into his Proposal. I followed my Conductor, and at a small distance from London, we fell upon a great Road where there was an infinite Number of Spectators assembled in a Groupe. But judge, dear Isaac, at my Surprize, when looking about me I saw a Gibbet, and twenty Highwaymen and other Malefactors on the point of being executed. I cannot say that I saw both at the same time, for the latter were not yet come, but the People spoke of their coming with a high Air of Satisfaction. How! said I to my Friend, What is this! The charming Spectacle of which you spoke to me! Be quiet, said he, You will have all the Reason in the World to be satisfy'd, the Play will presently begin, they only wait for the Actors who are upon the Road.

While my Friend was a speaking, I heard a prodigious Noise; I turn'd my Head and saw a Cart, and in it several People some of whom were well dress'd. Ay! Ay! cry'd my Friend, I see by the Looks of the Gentlemen that you will be well enough pleas'd with this Scene. Why, returned I, what are these People? And what do they come here for? Come here for, returned he, laughing, why these People are to perform the principal Parts. I then began to consider with Attention the People

ple in the Cart, who as they passed near me appeared, notwithstanding they were so well dressed, to have each a Cord about his Neck, with which a Moment after he was to be tyed up. I was going to ask my Friend some Questions about the Dress of these People, which I thought pretty extraordinary, and at the same time ill chosen; but I was prevented by the Harangue of one of the Highwaymen: He cough'd, he spit, looked about him, as unconcernedly as if he had been a Spectator; next he pulled off a pair of white Gloves and put them up in his Pocket, and then addressing himself to the Croud, he told them, that God permitted him to come to that End for playing at Cards on Sundays; had it not been for this Crime, he fancied it seems that he should never have been discovered, but have gone on quietly and methodically in the way of his Profession.

While the Gentleman was making his Speech, another of his Companions practised a thousand whimsical Grimaces, and said from time to time twenty Droll Things in order to make the Spectators smile. If I had not been informed how this Comedy was to end, I should certainly have fancied I had been present at a Mountebanks Stage. Our Highwayman Orator spoke pretty much with the Air of one of these itinerant Doctors when he is distributing his Packets; and the other Fellow, who contented himself with lesser Motions and a sort of dumb Shew, resembled pretty strongly a Pierrot or Jack Pudding. As I was looking very attentively upon these unhappy Creatures, in order to discover whether this false Bravery with which they mimic Heroism in their last Moments would really hold out, the Hangman, who had already fasten'd the Ropes to the Gallows, gave the the Horses a stroke with his Whip, and the Cart sliding away, the Actors remained pendant in the Air, where they made a very odd figure. Immediately upon this a great Number of People ran to put them out of their Pain. Some pulled them by the Legs, others struck them with their Fists upon the Stomach, and by the Ease and Coolness with which they did this, I perceived that the English were far enough from that Delicacy which inspires other People on such Occasions, and fills them with a Horror for such as by their Crimes have brought themselves to a violent Death.

As soon as I had lost Sight of this dismal Spectacle, I could not help thinking of that Insensibility with which those whom I just now censured suffered, and concerning which I took occasion to question my Friend: Pray, said I, what could be the cause that these two Highwaymen put on an Air of Intrepidity, unaffected by any of their Companions in Death? The Reason, returned my Friend, was, because they had an Inclination to die as they had liv'd, and to leave behind them the Character of Men of Spirit. In other Countries when a Criminal is condemn'd, his Head is presently taken up with the Importance of his Voyage, and his Conscience, forsooth, claims all his Attention. Here it is quite another Thing, a Man of Courage who hopes to wipe off a part of the Shame by his Manner of sustaining his Punishment, has other sort of Thoughts in his Head. He takes care to get himself shav'd, powder'd, and well dress'd, and then this Dress again is in part, to have the Air of a Wedding, and part that of a Funeral. He likewise equips himself with such a Speech as you heard the Man make just now, of which he gives a Copy to a Person who consoles him in his last Moments, by giving him solemn Assurances of seeing it printed and published.

How

How! cried I, struck with Astonishment at what my Friend had told me, is it possible that all the sad Stuff I heard that Fellow say should be printed and laid before the World? I shall be no longer astonished that Malefactors die here like Beasts, without shewing any Marks of Concern for the flagrant Villanies they have committed, or like Fools trifle away their last Moments in playing antick Tricks to divert a Mob. Is it permitted amongst a People who pique themselves so much on their Reflection and good Sense, that publick Executions should be thus in a manner burlesqu'd, the necessary Consequence of which must be the encouraging all those Crimes that are most dangerous for the Publick? The Fear of Shame is as strong in a human Soul, as the Fear of Punishment. How many People would risque their Lives to rescue themselves from Want, if the Fear of exposing their Families to everlasting Infamy did not withhold them! Yet in this Country it is not only thought an Act of Injustice to reflect on the Family of a Criminal, but it is likewise thought reasonable to abate as much as is possible the Shame of his Execution. Whatever he has done in his Life, a Malefactor may acquire the Esteem of this Nation at his Death, provided he behaves then like a Beast or a Madman. Considering this, I am really amazed there are not in England many more Thieves of all Stamps, than there are. Sure I am, that all imaginable Pains is taken to encrease their Number. It is true they are punished, but provided they die intrepid, this Punishment carries along with it very little Shame. If a Fellow dies boldly and with Spirit, his Memory instead of being abhorred is cherished, and the Press is employed to transmit an Account of his Bravery to Posterity.

If instead of applauding a Malefactor's stupid Harangue, who is impudent enough to make a Jest of his his Suffering, his Behaviour was treated with a proper Contempt, and his ill-placed Intrepidity received the Resentment it deserved, by an Appearance of double Indignation in the Spectators, Men capable of bad Practices would be abashed at the Consideration of their Consequences, and the Fear of the Infamy attending them would affright them more, than the Fear of that violent Death to which they are exposed, the Horror of which is greatly abated by the Applause they expect from the Resolution with which they die. It is really with me a Question who is least in his Wits, the Man who applauds a hardened Criminal, or the Criminal who fancies he can efface his Guilt by shewing no Sort of Concern about it.

All these Arguments, dear Isaac, made no Impression upon my Friend ; so far from it, that he pretended to defend this crying Abuse founded only on ridiculous Prejudices, and flattered himself that he had fully excused it by attributing it to the natural Intrepidity of the English, and the Contempt they have for Death. It is, said I, for that very Reason, that the People of this Country should have other Motives to restrain them; when taking away their Lives will not terrify Folks, must you not have Recourse to other Methods to deter them from doing Mischief. It might be allowable amongst Nations where the Fear of Death terrifies beyond description, to abate something of Shame in their Executions, because in other respects they have force enough to produce the Effects which are looked for from them; but amongst you English, how is it possible to keep you to your Duty? This was received just as my former Discourse had been. My Friend contented himself with laughing in my Face, and I must own that as to this Head, the English are a very odd sort of People.

I dare say, dear Isaac, you will be no less shock'd than I, at this ridiculous Practice of extenuating
in

in such a manner the Infamy which such Wretches deserve who perish by the Halter, and that you will readily admit that the Prejudices of some polite Nations are frequently as ridiculous as those of untaught Savages. Every Man who will make use of his Reason, will easily discern that it is a Thing more excusable to push to Extremity the Severity with which such Men are treated, as bring themselves to suffer ignominious Deaths, than by pitying them to hurt Society. All imaginable Pains should be taken to find out Means of striking such People with Terror, and this more especially as they pretend to despise Death. The Duke de Vendosme, during the last War in Italy, caused a great Number of Banditti and Assassins to be hang'd up, but without being able to put an end to such Disorders; which on the contrary continued as frequent as ever, the most horrid Murders being committed every Week, either on account of Jealousy or private Piques. At length however the Duke fell upon a Remedy unthought of before; he took hold of the Italian Superstition, and gave Orders that no Assassin should for the future be allowed a Confessor, in order to settle his Conscience before Death. This had the desired Effect, for it terrified those Miscreants infinitely more than the Fear of Death. The Risque of being hang'd was nothing; but to be hang'd without Confession was a Chance they could not be brought to stand.

When I was at Paris, the Chevalier de Maisin told me a Story of a Soldier who was condemned to be shot, and who absolutely refused to have any thing to do with the Priests. All imaginable Pains were taken to convince him of the Folly and Wickedness of such a Behaviour, but in vain, he remained firm to the very Hour of his Execution, notwithstanding all the Representations of his becoming the Prey of Devils, and of his suffering the most intolerable Torments to all Eternity when he came to die. In this sullen Disposition he was led out; but as he went along, he took it into his Head to ask what they would do with his Body? To which it was answered, that it would be thrown into the Common Sewer. How! said he, shan't I be buried in holy Ground? No, replied the Priest, since you are determined not to die like a Christian, we see no reason why you should fare like a Christian after Death. The Thoughts of not being interred in a Church-Yard, did more with this Fellow than the Fear of Damnation. He thought nothing of his Soul's lying eternally in Hell, but he could not bear that his Body should be thrown into a Common Sewer.

Behold, my dear Isaac, an evident Proof of the Effects which Shame and a Sense of Infamy will produce even in the Minds of the most hardened Men. There will always remain even among such Creatures as these, such a Portion of Self-Love, as will make them extremely sensible of any Expressions of Horror towards them. For this reason I am persuaded that it is so far from being unjust, that it is in Truth a Thing useful to Society, to keep up a sort of Shyness towards such Families as have had any of their Branches cut off by the Hands of the common Hangman. Throwing an indelible Blemish upon those who are most dear to a Man, is a Curb that will restrain some Dispositions untractable by other Means; and Experience will shew that such as are no way sensible of the Fear of Death, retain yet a Dread of covering with perpetual Infamy a Father, a Mother, Wife and Children.

I know very well, that this Maxim will appear contrary to Equity, inasmuch as it renders innocent People obnoxious to those Punishments which only the Guilty have deserved. But then we must remember, that it is simply impossible even the wisest Laws should prove beneficial to all the World. All that can be expected is, that they should turn to the Benefit of the greatest part of them. This is the Sentiment of a very great Philosopher, who in order to prove the Justice of the Roman Laws against insolvent Debtors, maintains that it is better a small Number of People should run the Hazard of losing the Benefit of a just Excuse, than that the whole World should be left at Liberty to look out specious Pretexts for not paying their just Debts *.

Fare thee well, dear Isaac, live content, and mayst thou be happy in all thy Affairs.

London.

L E T T E R CXLIII.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraite, formerly a Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
CECA.

THE Letters you have written me, dear Monceca, and wherein you speak so freely of the Men of Letters in England, have induced me to

* Satius enim erat à paucis etiam justum excusationem non accipi, quam ab omnibus aliquam tentari. Seneca de Beneficiis, Lib. vii. cap. xvi.

reflect a little on the great Men our Nation has produced, and who are utterly unknown but to the small Circle of the Learned. The Nazarenes in general believe, that our Brethren are plunged in the grossest Ignorance, and that Obstinacy is the sole Support of our Religion. Some of their Doctors have gone yet farther, and have taught a most extraordinary Doctrine incompatible with any sound Notions, even of the divine Being. They say, that he permits the Israelites to remain in the State they are, that their persisting in their Faith, may serve as a Proof of that of the Nazarenes. Is it possible to advance any Thing more apparently false? For let us suppose for a Moment, that the Jewish Religion were false, would it not still be ridiculous to suppose, that God damns a certain Number of Creatures merely to afford the means of Salvation to others? As if it were necessary for him to make use of so cruel a Stratagem to oblige some People to stick to their Belief. The Vanity of the Nazarenes glares excessively, in their pretending to defend such an Opinion as this; they think it not enough, it seems, to treat us upon all Occasions with sovereign Contempt, but they would also make God participate with them in this sort of Usage, without reflecting that such a Manner of acting is repugnant to his Essence. We need not be astonished, dear Monicca, at the Pride of some Philosophers, who would persuade us, that the Universe is made for Man alone, and that so many Worlds exceeding in Size that which we inhabit, so many Suns larger and brighter than that which enlightens our System, are scattered through the boundless Expanse, merely to entertain the Sight of one of us Worms upon the Earth. How absurd soever this Opinion may be, it is still less so, than to believe that God makes one

one Soul everlastingly miserable, that to another he may facilitate the Means of becoming eternally happy.

Visions of this Stamp are so ridiculous, that there is nothing difficult in exposing them even to People of very moderate Abilities. But the Nazarene Divines are by no means for allowing us the Liberty of refuting their Errors. When one of our learned Men writes a Book in our Defence, our Adversaries are not only forbid the Reading of it, but in certain Countries they push this Severity so far as to hinder even our selves from reaping the Benefit of such Instructions. In Italy, the Jews are forbid to have in their Custody the Commentaries of Abarbinel on the minor Prophets. You know as well as I do, dear Monceca, how excellent a Book that is, and that the more our Enemies condemn it, the more they represent it as dangerous, the more with respect to us they commend and applaud it. The Jealousy and Tyranny of their Priests hath not stopp'd at this single Prohibition; many of their Doctors have written, that it would be both useful and necessary to prohibit all the Books of Abarbinel to the Jews, because they are capable of confirming us in our Sentiments. Is it not, Monceca, a pleasant way of refuting a Book to suppress it? What Judgment do they think, I will not say the Learned, but even the middle sort of People, who use their Understandings, will pass on such a Conduct?

The Nazarenes have indeed Reason to fear the Spirit and the Learning of Abarbinel. That illustrious Rabbín was equal even to our famous Maimonides. What Spleen soever our Enemies have shewn against his Writings, they acknowledge, however, that where his Interpretations have nothing to do between them and their Controversies with the Jews, he is sublime, judicious, perspicuous, and full of Candor. Can we expect any more; ought we to hope they will overturn their own Objections?

The Merit of Abarbinel was so great, that it overcame the Prejudices of many of the Nazarenes, insomuch that after his Death, many Venetian Noblemen did not disdain to attend his Funeral, which was celebrated by the principal Jews of Padua. It was in a Church-yard of that famous City, that this famous Jew was buried, and some time after they interred Juda Mentz in the same Place. This Rabbi was also an illustrious Man. He died Rector of the Academy of Padua. All Persons of Letters agree, that he had a brisk and lively Imagination, and that he spoke and wrote with great Facility. But, however, he had not either the Knowledge of Menassah Ben Israel, or the profound Erudition of Solomon Ben Virga. The Conciliator of the first mentioned Rabbi, is an excellent Work, and the History of the Jews composed by the latter is a Piece worthy of the highest Esteem.

Abraham de Balmis deserves a distinguished Rank among the Learned of our Nation. That illustrious Physician was an excellent Grammarian, and an excellent Philosopher, composed a Book of the utmost use of the Means of acquiring the Knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue. * A Christian Critique did not however spare this great Man. As he had too much Candor to decide hastily upon

* Abraham de Balmis nihil aliud agere mihi visus est quam veterum Doctrinam perpetuò convellere atque impugnare, magis insectando occupatus, quàm in docendo, at in dubium tantum vocare priscorum præceptiones; cum interim nihil certi statua', non dicere est, sed ridere. Munsterus in Præfatione Grammatices, apud Spizelii Felicem Literatum, p. 918.

Things which seemed to him to lie beyond the Reach of human Capacity, and as he chose to examine Things to the Bottom before he admitted them to be absolutely certain, they charged him with a Design of destroying all Systems, without intending to erect any thing in their stead. Thus because he was not rash and overbearing, they would needs have him a Sceptick.

The Nazarenes are so given to search out whatever may tarnish the Reputation of our Authors, that they seldom spare any. They seem especially to bend their Attacks against those who have most Merit. You know, my dear Monceca, that it is to the illustrious Akiba we stand indebted for all that is either true or reasonable in respect to the Oral Law; and tho' I am a Caraites, yet I must frankly own, that if nothing had been added to the Writings of this great Man, all that he says with respect to the written Law, ought to be received among all the different Sects of Jews. However, the Merit of Akiba is far from standing unimpeached by the Nazarene Doctors: They represent him as a crafty Fellow, a Cheat and an Impostor. Such are the Appellations they bestow on a Rabbi, who by his Candor and Knowledge, merits, that all true Israelites should agree in giving him the Title of Sethumataah, or, The Authentick.

It must however be confessed, my dear Monceca, that if all the Books which the Jews attribute to Akiba were really and truly his, the Nazarenes would have abundant reason to reject them as full of Lyes and Fables. In this respect they would only follow the Example of the Caraites. For I must do so much Justice to the Skill and Merit of that Rabbi, as to stand persuaded that all the Reveries in the Talmud, did not flow from him, as from their Source, nor were originally collected from his Writings. It is very true, that Akiba was the first Compiler of the Deuterofes, or Jewish Traditions, and that he drew together and digested into one Work, what Hillel, Simeon and other Doctors had written in different Treatises; but that learned Rabbi was far from collecting all the Extravagancies which we now see in the Talmud. It was such who afterwards laboured in that Work who invented them, or at least had the Weakness to transmit them to Posterity. Even the most zealous Partizans of the Talmud, are compelled to own that Akiba was dead before Rabbi Juda composed the Misna or Talmud of Jerusalem, they pretend that this last mentioned Rabbi was born the very Day the other died; but sure it is without all Foundation, that after having reported this, that they break out thus, when one Sun was eclipsed, another appeared in the Horizon *. I protest, dear Monceca, a Man must be prejudiced to a high Degree, who can see any thing like an Equality between these Jews; and I must own to you, that even at the time that I had no Thoughts of becoming a Caraites, I always looked on the one as a Man of Learning of the first Class †, and on the other as an Author of a very suspicious Authority. Heaven has at length been pleased to remove the Clouds which hindered my Sight, and I now clearly distinguish the Folly of those pretended Traditions, for which Reason I reject them. But before I took this Step, I was resolved to examine thoroughly into the Matter, that I might avoid doing that hastily which I might repent at leisure. I am therefore pretty positive that I had good Grounds for rejecting the Talmud and all its Dreams. At least, I flatter my self, that I omitted nothing in my power, in order to discover and come at the Truth, and if I have been deceived, I trust that the Deity, who knows my good Intentions, will have Mercy upon me ; for it appears absolutely impossible that he should have given any Authority for the puerile Observations dictated by our Rabbies. Can it be believed, that he would ever descend into a Tale of the Necessities to which we are subjected by the Structure of our Bodies? Is it not a most astonishing Folly to place among the Number of religious Ceremonies our manner of eating of Nature ? However some of our Rabbies have not been ashamed to write very copiously upon this Subject. In the first place, they have settled the Points of the Compass towards which these sort of Conveniences should be turned, and these are the North and South. Next it is settled, that we are not to remove our Garments but in a sitting Posture ; this is the second Rule : And the third is, That in all Affairs of this Nature we use the left, and not the right Hand, which would be a grievous Offence ; such, according to these Rabbins, are the sacred Mysteries of the Law, which are not to be dispensed with ; and to give greater Weight to these Impertinencies, they are inserted in the Writings of Akiba whom they have made the Author of these ridiculous Precepts, which doubtless he never thought of. For it is impossible to believe that a Man so truly learned as he was, should have run into such low and pitiful Absurdities ; but they were glad, no doubt, to lay hold of so venerable a Name as his, in order to give a Sanction to their Chimæras *.

* R. Juda Princeps natus est illo Die quo obiit R. Akiba, de quo aiunt Sol exortus est, et Sol occidit. Pezron, Defence of the Antiquities of Times, p. 76.

† Hujus nomen (inquit Autor Libri Zemach David) exiit ab uno extremo Mundi usque ad aliud, atque totam legem Orale ex ejus ore accipimus. Konig. Bibliotheca Vetus & Nova, p. 19.

have

The Rabbies, dear Monceca, have done as much Mischief to the Jewish Religion by their Impertinencies, as the Christian Monks have to theirs, by their deplorable and sometimes ridiculous Superstitions. The silly Works both of the one and the other, have prejudiced but too many People against all the Books in general, which treat of both Religions. They are so much scandalized at the Fooleries which they see not only tolerated, but approved and commended, that they cannot persuade themselves that there can be found any sensible Writers in those Communions, wherein some Members receive as useful, and necessary Rules, such Follies and Extravagancies as are scarce pardonable in Ideots.

Thus on Account of a Prejudice fatal to the Learned amongst us, the Nazarenes will not be brought to distinguish between our Rabbies, but condemn them in the Lump. In the very same manner the Protestants despise many excellent Works written by Catholick Divines, but sure with very little Reason. For Instance, they slight the moral Essays of M. Nicole, the Sermons of Bourdaloue, and many others, because they judge of all their Books of Piety by the Legend of

* Dixit Akiba, ingressus sum aliquando post Rabbi Josuam in sedis secretæ locum & tria didici. Didici I. quod non versus orientem et occidentem, sed versus septentrionem et austrum, convertere nos debemus. Didici II. quod non in pedes erectum, sed jam confidentem, se regere liceat. Didici III. quod Podex non dextrâ sed sinistra Manu abstergendus sit . . . Legis hæc Arcana sunt. Barajetha, in Massech. Beruchot. fol. 62.

St. Francis, the Life of Mary Alacoque, the Works of the Monk Cæsarius, those of the Jesuits Outerman and Gazeus, the Mystical City of God, by Mary d'Agreda, and such like. On the other hand, it must be allowed, that there are very few Papists who will be at the pains of distinguishing between the learned and judicious Protestants, and those Visionaries who wait for the Accomplishment of the pretended Prophecies of Jurieu or such like Rhapsodies. Such are the unhappy Effects of that Prejudice which weak and wicked Writers beget in others against the Religion they profess.

Farewel, dear Monceca, live easy and contented, and mayst thou be always prosperous.

From Cairo.

L E T T E R CXLIV.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople, to AARON MONCECA.

I Have within these few Days, my dear Monceca, contracted an Acquaintance with a Samaritan Jew. He has set me right as to abundance of Things, of which till now I had but very confused Ideas. I looked upon the Samaritans in general as Hereticks plunged in an Abyss of Errors. I believed that none of their Ceremonies did at all resemble those of the ancient Israelites; nay, I would scarce admit that their former Worship had any thing in common with that of the Jews. These Prejudices

Prejudices of mine are entirely dissipated, and I am thoroughly satisfied that I have been in an Error.

Of all the Jewish Sects, the Samaritans differ least in their Customs from those of our Ancestors. Most of these People live at Gaza, Damascus, Cairo, but principally at Sichem, now called Neapolis. They offer Sacrifices upon Mount Gerizim, affirming positively that this is the chosen Place of the Lord. They not only cite in Defence of this their Opinion, a Passage of their Pentateuch *, which they charge our Ancestors with corrupting, by putting Mount Hebal whence the Curses were to be pronounced for Mount Gerizim, whence the Blessings were to be derived. But they insist also on Prescription, on the uninterrupted Succession of their High Priests, on Tradition, on History, and † on the tacit Confession of the Author of the Christian Law, who did not dispute or deny the Truth of what the Samaritan Woman alledged, that their Fathers worshipped on Mount Gerizim ‖. This Reproach of Corruption which our Ancestors threw by wholesale on this poor People, has been adopted by certain learned Men among the Nazarenes, without reflecting that the establishing this Proposition as a Truth, would be equally prejudicial to them and to us. As I am fully persuaded of this, I should be glad after reading my Letter, if you would give me your Thoughts upon the Matter.

The Samaritan from whom I learned all these Particulars, assured me that their Priests are to this Day of the Race of Aaron; and that they never

* Deuteron. xxvii. 4.

† Joseph. Antiq. Lib. iv. cap. ult. et lib. xiii. cap.

vi.

‖ 1 John iv. 21, 22.

intermarry out of that Family, that they may not sully the Honour of their Descent. He tells us likewise, that the Altar on which they sacrificed, is the very same which was built by the Israelites immediately after their Passage over Jordan. I must own to you, dear Monceca, that I can scarce give Credit to the Antiquity and Authenticity of these Stories, but rather think it a Tale fit to be inserted among the fabulous Collections of the Rabbies. If indeed any thing could give it Weight, it must be that wonderful Care and Industry with which the Samaritans have always preserved the Customs of their Ancestors, and whatever came down to them with the venerable Stamp of Antiquity. They yet keep up and make use of the ancient Hebrew Characters which differ much from those that are in use with us, and which were the Invention of *Esdra*s, after the Return from the Babylonish Captivity.

You will easily apprehend, my dear Monceca, that People so much attached as the Samaritans are to the Customs of our earliest Ancestors are far enough from admitting as Rules of Faith, all the Reveries of the Talmud. Far from adopting the Sentiments of the Rabbies, they go yet farther than the Caraites, and acknowledge no Scriptures but the first Books of Moses, looking on the rest of the sacred Code, as written by pious Men under the immediate Direction of Heaven, but yet of no decisive Authority with respect to Matters of Faith. It is easy to perceive that the Samaritans run into a gross Error in this respect: For since they admit that these Books were really written by the Persons whose Names they bear, and that their Authors were pious Men, influenced by the Spirit of God, why should they hesitate at admitting the Authority of the Books themselves? If it could once be made out to the Caraites that those who composed the Talmud were Persons of Wisdom and Learning, they would receive it without Delay ; much more if could be made appear that the Rabbies by whom it was composed were enlightned by the Spirit of God.
it

It is necessary, dear Monceca, when one would avoid giving a blind Obedience to whatsoever is contained in a Book, to alledge that its Author was a mere Man and uninspired. For when once it is admitted that a Book was written by Inspiration, absolute Submission is due thereto. It is ridiculous to attempt to range in different Classes, such Pieces as have fallen from the Pens of inspired Men. For we cannot believe that Men are more or less inspired, or that whatever they receive by Inspiration ought to be received with any different Degree of Credit.

A famous German Divine went very near asserting this erroneous Opinion *. In the Heat of a dispute, he advanced a Proposition with which his Adversaries for ever after reproached him. He affirmed that a certain Work written by an ancient Divine, whom the Nazarenes suppose to be one of their Apostles, was low, poor, and little better than Chaff, in Comparison of the Writings of other Doctors †. His Enemies did not fail to attack him vigorously on his maintaining so evident a Falshood. In the End he was obliged to acknowledge his Error, and at this Day the most zealous of his Disciples readily admit that he committed a very great Fault in endeavouring to establish a Sentiment, so directly opposite to

* Luther.

† The Epistle general of St. James.

Reason *. This Divine, in order to deliver himself from some Difficulties, durst not deny the Credit of the Book which made against him, but then he diminished it as much as he could, and made it much inferior to another Book which appeared to favour his own Sentiments.

Strange is the Effect of that blind Prejudice into which even the greatest Men are apt to fall, through an over-hasty Desire of supporting whatever they advance ! Is it possible to find out a greater Absurdity than this of distinguishing Degrees of Wisdom in the Spirit of God ? Or can there be any thing more opposite to common Sense than this Notion, of giving more or less Credit to divinely inspired Writings, as they agree more or less with our own Opinions ?

I know, my dear Monceca, that the Rabbins and the Caraites, far from imitating the impious Boldness of certain Nazarenes, or the ill-founded Scruples of the Samaritans preserve equally for the Books of the Sacred Code, an infinite Respect, without pretending to judge by the Light of their Reason of the Worth of any of the inspired Writings. But in avoiding this Error they have run into another, which is common to them and to the Nazarene Doctors ; that is to say, they tear and torture certain Passages in order to bring them to favour their Sentiments, and by this means they vouch all the Vapours of their heated Imaginations by these forced Applications of the Holy Writings, insomuch that there is nothing so absurd, not only with regard to Rites and Ceremonies, but also with respect to the Doctrines of Religion, which they do not attempt to prove in this manner.

* Cum autem illud legissem, non rem dissimulavi, sed fatebar in responsione mea ad Gregorium Martinum. In illa quidem Præfatione scribit Lutherum, S. Jacobi Epistolam non posse dignate certare cum Epistolis S. S. Petri & Pauli, sed Epistolam stramineam, si cum aliis comparetur. Quam ejus sententiam non probo, atque in recentioribus Editionibus cum omissa sint illa verba, opinor ipsum postea Lutherum hanc suam sententiam improbasse. Whitakeri Respons. ad Rainoldi Refutationem, p. 103.

Is it, for Example, possible to find out any thing more wild and extravagant than the Rabbinical Interpretation of this Verse in the Psalms? Behold I was shapen in Wickedness, and in Sin hath my Mother conceived me. Instead of going into the Opinion of the Nazarene Doctors, who have fully proved, that the Prophet speaks here of that original Blemish derived to all Men from their first Parents, they will needs have it, that Jesse the Father of David begat him in Adultery, tho' on his own Wife, whom he took to have been one of her Maid-Servants, upon whose Chastity he had attempted. Is not this, dear Monceca, a fine Explication of so clear and easy a Text? And what Opinion may we not expect to see supported by Scripture Proofs, alledged by the Rabbins, when out of the plainest things, they can forge such romantic Adventures, and gravely deliver so extraordinary a Story as this of the pretended Adultery of David's Father, tho' there be not a Word of it in the holy Books?

An Italian Jew not only adopted this fabulous Tale, in a Work which he published, but even attempted to carry it further than any of his Brethren had done, by making a pretty long Dissertation to prove forsooth that Jesse had done perfectly well in endeavouring to go to Bed to his Maid, because his Wife was grown pretty far in Years,

Years, and as he apprehended past Child-bearing *. This Sentiment, my Friend, contains an excellent Moral, and if these wise and honest Rabbins would but effectually establish it, it would in all human Probability contribute pretty much to the raising Servants Wages, in consideration of the Likelihood of their finding more Employment than at present.

Confess then, dear Monceca, that we Caraites have some Reason to reject these Rabbinical Comments, tho' as yet you are attached to their Sect, it is impossible you should not see their Errors. That Uneasiness and Embarrassment which naturally attends a Man's changing his Religion, keeps you as yet in the wrong Track; but as I earnestly wish, so I sincerely hope, that the God of our Fathers will afford you his victorious Grace which he vouchsafes to such, as he leads to the Knowledge of the Truth, and that thereby breaking the Chains which for the present bind you to the Rabbins, you shall come and range your self under the Banner of the Caraites, who are not only the true Jews, but almost the sole People in the World who submit their Judgments to the Divine Writings, without attempting to abuse these in order to establish their own Opinions.

Many of the Nazarene Doctors, as also of the Cadies and Musties among the Mussulmen, run into the same Fault with the Rabbies. They do not submit their Opinions to those contained in the Writings which they believe inspired, but explain all these Works in a manner conformable to their own Notions, infomuch that ten Divines, each of a different Opinion, fhall equally pretend to fupport his own Doctrines by Authority of Scripture; and it is this Conduct fo inconfiftent with publick Peace and publick Safety, that hath occafioned fo many religious Wars, and fuch Broils and Difurbances in States.

* Il Pensiero d' Isai era buono, perche essendo la Patrona vecchia, e la Massera giovane, haveva Desiderio di haver altri Figliuoli. Percetti da esser imparati dalle Donne Ebree, p. 69.

The Nazarenes would be happy, my dear Mon- ceca, if they did but obferve the fame Laws with us Caraites, who never venture to write any Commentaries on the facred Scriptures. It is held with us a Prophanation to mingle human Opinions with divine Laws. The Caraites believe implicitly whatfoever they find in the Scriptures without pretending to penetrate their Obfcurities, but fubmitting their Underftandings when they meet with Paffages which transcend them. But for this wife and eafy Maxim, they would at this Day be as full of Trouble and Confufion as other Sects. They would have a Train of Doctours differing in Opinions, and darkening by their Difcourfes the Points they pretended to illuftrate, till by Degrees fo many and fuch arduous Doubts would be brought into People's Heads, as in the End would lead them either into Scepticifm, or Irreligion.

In order to prove the Inutility of Commentaries on the facred Writings, there is nothing more requifite than to fhew, that they are calculated to do more Hurt than Good. Now there is nothing eafier, than to produce the ftrongeft Evidence in favour of this Propofition. It muft, in the firft place, be laid down as a Principle, that fince God has been pleafed to give certain Laws and Rules to Mankind, he has likewise been pleafed to explain himfelf in a manner clear and intelligible. For it would be abfurd to fay, that God had revealed his Will to Man in fuch a manner, as that it was impossible it should be comprehended. Nor is it less unreasonable to say, that God commanded Men to obey him, but however did not desire they should obey him. If therefore we are bound to acknowledge that God hath revealed his Will to Men in Terms perfectly intelligible, why should we attempt to explain them more clearly? A Divine, a Rabbi, a Mufti, or a Bonze, do they understand the Extent of Mens Capacities better than he who made them. If he had intended to teach Men the Mysteries which these sort of People propagate, he would without question have taught them plainly.
it

But it may be said, that many of the sacred Books are written evidently in a very obscure Stile, and in which there are many things not to be understood. These without question were given by God to Men for some use or other, and how shall this use be made of them, if they are not understood? It is necessary therefore to enquire into their hidden Sense.

This manner of reasoning, dear Monceca, is however false and captious. If there are in the Scripture certain Passages which we do not understand, we ought to conclude that they are not necessary to our Salvation, because we cannot perform what we are not informed of, and it is in vain for us to endeavour to penetrate those Secrets which Providence hath but half revealed. Heaven knows that it is for our Good that we should not have clear Ideas of some Things, and when Men would penetrate into these, this Crime of theirs is punished by their feeling themselves bewildered. The Nazarene Doctors who have employed their Pens in writing Commentaries on the Revelations, a very obscure Piece, which they believe sacred, afford a clear Proof of the Truth of what I say.

The

The Protestants make this Book the Basis of all their Invectives against the Papists, and the Papists again make use of the same Book, in order to paint out their Adversaries in the most odious Colours *. Is it possible to make a worse, or a more unwarrantable use of such Works as are supposed to be dictated by the Deity himself?

Farewel, dear Monceca, live content and happy, and beware of indulging a rash Spirit of Curiosity.

Cairo.

* The Revelations hath been in all times one of the principal Books whence the Divines have drawn abundantly injurious Expressions, in order to pelt those against whom they had a Spite. What is still more singular, is, that the Rabbies also have profited of these Obscurities in the Revelations. They pretend that this Book was written by one of their Brethren, in order to deceive the primitive Christians. See in respect to this Subject the Letter CLX. Vol. V. As also the 4th Letter of the Secret Memoirs of the Republick of Letters. In which Letters this remarkable Point of History is fully discussed, and the original Passages from the Rabbins also are there produced at large.

L E T T E R CXLV.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE English, dear Isaac, are not satisfied with enjoying uninterrupted Liberty in this Life : They think also they ought to be permitted to quit it when their Misfortunes press them too closely, whenever they grow tired of it, or of what passes therein. I was prodigiously surprized at my first Arrival, at the frequent Accounts I heard of such Deaths. It sometimes happened, that a Man I had conversed with, in the Evening, thought proper to cut his Throat next Day. Such as brought the News of this Accident, instead of appearing astonished, generally approved the Action mad as it was. If I enquired what the Reasons were, which determined the distracted Creature to take away his own Life, We know not, answered they coldly, 'tis very probable he did not like his Situation in this World, and had a mind to see how they went on in the other. His Life was his own, and in acting as he did, he hurt nobody but himself.

I fancied for a good while, that such as thus took it in their Heads to make away themselves did it in consequence of Distraction, and I was very far from imagining that the English hang'd themselves, or cut their Throats after mature Deliberation ; but by the many unhappy Instances I have seen, and by the Relations I have had from Persons sons of undoubted Credit, I am convinced it is even so.

About two Years ago a working Man and his Wife being both weary of the Troubles they endured here, determined to put an End to them. They had a Daughter of about five or six Years of Age. They thought it but reasonable not to leave her exposed to those Mischiefs which they found too hard for themselves: On mature Consideration they resolved that she should make the Voyage with them. When they had once settled and adjusted all things necessary for the Execution of their Design, they determined to justify it to the Publick. Hereupon they composed a Narrative of their Misfortunes, entered into a long Detail of the Miseries under which they had laboured, and the Causes of their dying as they did. They complained that in spite of their utmost Endeavours in an honest way, they found it impossible for them to subsist; that they were more distressed the more they strove against their hard Fortune. That in fine, they saw but one way left to avoid doing base Things, and to this they had Recourse, beseeching God, to whom, in quitting Life, they bequeathed their departing Souls, to have Mercy upon them, as they firmly trusted he would. Having finished this their Apology, they first cut the Throat of their Daughter, and then hang'd themselves.

This pernicious Custom of making themselves away, is far from being peculiar to the meaner sort of People, the Great are not exempt therefrom. Men of Figure and Quality now and then cut their Throats, as well as other Folks, purely because the World is no longer pleasant to them. And so far is this from drawing any Reflections or Stain upon their Memories, that they find very often Numbers who approve and applaud them.

You cannot imagine, dear Isaac, for what slight Reasons the English dispatch themselves. Some Months ago, here was a Man who did his Business, because truly a new Duty was laid upon Strong-Waters. He would live no longer forsooth, since Geneva was to be dearer. I am credibly informed of the Truth of a still stranger Business. An Englishman on reviewing his Life, fancied he saw in it a tedious Repetition of the same things. What, said he, have I been doing all my Days? I rise in the Morning; I eat and drink at Noon; I walk about all Day, and at Night I go to Bed; this, without Alteration, is my Course of Life. Part of my time is spent in dressing and undressing. A fine Piece of Drudgery truly! Come, come, I am quite jaded with this endless insipid Part I am to act, and will even quit it and the World together. This Resolution once taken, our Englishman to rid himself of his Weariness, took up a Pistol and shot himself through the Head. Without doubt you must apprehend that a Man who destroyed himself on so slight an Account was looked on with Horror. No such thing, the Bravery he shewed in meeting his Fate gained him the Reputation of a Hero. But if it had been known that he discovered any Reluctancy or Apprehensions at the drawing near of Death, it would have lessened his Reputation. In vain had he killed himself, his Effort would have been looked on with Contempt. He who would acquire the Character of a Man of Courage in England, must not only do the greatest Crimes, but must also do them without any Signs of Shame or Repentance.

Some Years ago a Frenchman killed himself, but without deriving any Reputation from it, on the contrary, he had the Misfortune before he expired to hear himself loaded with the heaviest Reproaches. He had, unhappily for him! taken it into his Head to imitate the English. Whenever he heard of a Man who had cut his Throat, he felt an inward Motion of Envy, which at the same time stimulated him to follow so glorious an Example. You shall see one of these Days, said he to his Family, something will surprize you. I shall convince the World the French have as high Spirits as the English. Yes, yes, this is a Task I take upon me. As he explained himself no farther, his Friends and Family could not divine what it was he meant. After some Deliberation, he at length fully determined to vindicate the Honour of the French Nation, which he conceived to be excessively tarnished by their want of Resolution to kill themselves. Accordingly he took a Razor, and when he was left alone attempted to cut his Throat. But wanting Courage thoroughly to do his Work, he only gave himself a large Wound, and as soon as he saw the Blood stream, he called in People to assist him. Some English, who amongst others ran in, instead of affording him Help, began to insult him. These French Dogs, said they, would needs imitate us, and yet have not the Courage to cut a Throat as it should be. Look now, look at this cowardly Scoundrel, he has not cut deep enough by half an Inch. While the English were making these fine Reflections, in came the Relations of the wounded Person. A Surgeon was sent for, but to no purpose, his Care had no Effect, the poor Man after two days Torture died, and died without demonstrating that Equality he talked of.

I am out of all Patience, dear Isaac, when I see People who use their Senses to so good Purpose in other Matters of Moment, neglect the use of them in Things of the last Importance, and run into so extraordinary an Absurdity as to applaud such Madmen, as for very light Subjects of Chagrin attempt upon their own Lives. Not to treat the Memory of such a Man with proper Indignity, who throws away his Life without any real Necessity, is foolishly to approve Actions the most cruel and unnatural, which either Melancholy or a brutal Disposition can suggest. For from these Sources flow, in Fact, those Effects which the English would willingly attribute to Greatness of Soul, and particularly this Propensity to Self-Murder. All those bitter Reflections by which they are led to this Extremity of Folly, are the Produce of a dark, sullen, cloudy Temper of Mind, and of a fierce Humour incapable of supporting with Constancy the slightest Change of Fortune. It is therefore not thro' Courage, but through Weakness rather, that the English dispatch themselves as they do. To say the Truth, there is much more Spirit requisite to support generously an unforeseen Adversity than to rid one's self of it by violent Means.
in

The Crime of such People as murder themselves is inexcusable, look upon it in what Light you will. If we consider it as Philosophers, we discover an exceeding Weakness no way fit to enter into Comparison with that Firmness of the great Men of Antiquity, who died indeed bravely, but did not die unless they were forced to it for the Preservation of their Country, or their Glory. Never did any Greek or Roman cut his Throat out of too quick a Sense of private Misfortunes. The same Hero who threw himself into a Gulph to avert the Danger of Rome, would have supported any private and personal Misfortunes, without ever thinking of a violent Death by way of Discharge. Marius is an Example of a great Man induring Adversity without any Meanness. How many Englishmen would have dispatched themselves into the other World under such a Persecution as that of Sylla? Proscribed, pursued, reduced to the hard Necessity of hiding himself in a filthy Morass, Marius still waited the Decision of his Fate from Heaven, and thought it no way worthy of his heroick Courage, to seek in Death a Refuge from his Sorrows.

I am, dear Isaac, more charmed with the Courage and Firmness of a certain Spaniard, than with this Ferocity they disguise under the Name of a great Spirit. This Man with much Industry laboured for twenty Years together, to scrape up as much as might keep him comfortably in his old Age. Fortune, however, in an Instant stripped him of all that he had been saving. A Merchant whom he had entrusted with his All broke, and left him not worth a Groat. A hundred English would have resolved on a Leap in the Dark at such News. The Spaniard wiser, and of a juster Turn of Thought, determined to conquer Adversity, and to make his Destiny ashamed of her Injustice. Preserving therefore his Moderation and wonted Resolution, he said, presenting a Cord to Fortune, Here's a Rope, foolish Slut, take it and go hang thyself, since thou art not able to make me have Recourse to hanging.

If, on the other hand, we reflect on this Practice of Self-murder, as it regards Society and the publick Tranquillity, we shall find it extremely pernicious, and capable of producing great Mischiefs. What Revolutions, what Confusions, what Dangers may we not fear in a Country where People not only get over all Apprehensions of Death, but of all that is to happen after it? It is most certain, that a Man who is neither afraid of going hence, or of the Place to which he may go, is capable of doing strange Things before he takes his Journey. There are no other ways of restraining People, but by Religion or the Fear of Death. Now when both these Cords are broke in any Society, what Disorders may there not be expected? A Man who has committed the greatest Crimes which can be imagined, may make a Jest of all legal Punishments however severe, if he only uses so much Precaution, as to provide himself with the Means of putting an end to his Life as soon as apprehended. Murders, Robberies, Assassinations must be frequent. Kings themselves are not safe on their Thrones. It is the Nature of those Torments to which such as attempt on the Persons of Princes are reserved, that deters Paricides and Traytors from such Acts much more than the Thoughts of dying. The last Words of Clement the Monk who assassinated Henry III. are clear Proofs of this. I bless God, cry'd that Monster, while the Soldiers stabb'd him, that I die so easily; for I did not hope so quick a Passage out of this Life, or to escape at such a Rate.
the

It must be confessed, dear Isaac, that there can be nothing more dangerous to a State, than to have in it a Set of People not to be restrained by any Fear of Punishment. For one whom a Sense of Honour and Probity keeps within the Bounds of Justice, there are a hundred restrained by Fear. It cannot be denied, that Men are more inclined to Evil than to Good. All Customs, all Usages which tend to weaken these Bands, are prejudicial to Society. How much therefore ought we to abhor a Crime which opens a Door to all sorts of Evils? And can it be esteemed less than Madness to give this Crime the Titles of Courage and Greatness of Soul?

Farewel, dear Isaac, and mayst thou always use thy Reason in thy Adversity.

London.

LETTER CLXVI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

IT seems to me, dear Isaac, that the tragick Poets among the French are as much superior to the English, as the Philosophers of the former Nation are inferior to those of the latter. I find as great a Difference between Shakespear and Corneille, Addison and Racine, as between Descartes and Newton, Locke and Mallebranche. It is not that the Poets of this Country want Fire, or a lively Imagination ; on the contrary, they have a great deal of Spirit and Force. But the mischief of it is, that when they have raised themselves up to Heaven, they are immediately dazzled with their own Height, sink all on a sudden as swiftly as they rose, and sully by their Fall the Honours they have acquired. As they have not the least Knowledge of the Rules, or if they affect to despise them, we need not be surprized that they are unable to conduct in a proper Manner that Strength of Fancy which they derive from Nature.

Whatever Fecundity of Invention ! Whatever Sprightliness of Wit ! Whatever Boldness of Sentiment there may be ! yet Regularity is wanting in all Arts. The meanest Architect who follows the Rules of Palladio, will succeed much better than a Mason who has Genius, but who is notwithstanding ignorant and rash. The little Church of St. Justina of Padua, affords the Eye more Pleasure than the Pyramids of Egypt. Monuments of Grandeur indeed ! but which have a stronger Relish of Eastern Barbarism than of the Graces of the Greeks and Romans.
in

Such is the State, dear Isaac, of the English Theatre. I have seen there a great deal of Genius, and yet very few good Pieces : They play every Day at London a kind of horrible Farces, to which without Hesitation they give the pompous Names of Tragedies. I have seen in a very fine English Play, three Witches introduced in the oddest Manner imaginable, and pretending to boil Herbs together in a Caldron. I have sometimes seen the Stage in the Light of a Church-yard, and Grave-Diggers diverting themselves with tossing Skulls of dead Persons about ; nay, and which is ten times worse, I have seen this applauded.

Dryden, and above all Addison, hath taken pains to teach this barbarous Melpomene a little Manners. But in spite of all their Care, their Tragedy has still too much of a savage Appearance. It seems they are not able to attain that modest and majestic Air which heretofore distinguished the Greeks, as it now does the French Poets. Figure to your self, dear Isaac, the strange Alteration made when Voltaire's Tragedy of Zara came to be play'd on the English Stage ; they were forced to make that young Princess tear off her Hair by Handfuls, and roul herself on the Stage as if she had been in Fits. One would think, that an Author had little Obligation to a Translator for such extravagant Additions. The English Poet, however, was forced to accommodate the Piece to the Genius of his Nation ; that is, to make it succeed he made it ridiculous. In short, to obtain Applause at London, it is absolutely necessary to exhibit beautiful Monsters. If you keep too near Truth, it will never do.

Yet this does not arise from a want of Liking to natural Descriptions, there are in Shakespear numberless Passages extremely just, and every way perfect. But what then? If these continue any time, the Audience grow sick of them, and their Attention must be awakened by something wonderful and out of the common Road.

Within these few Years, the English have had Poets who have written very regular Pieces, but they have not succeeded, because the Audience thought them languishing and cold ; in truth, I do not think they did them wrong ; they were so in Fact, and one would be apt to think on seeing these modern Tragedies, that the English Poets had a Faculty of straining their Subjects, fallying beyond Truth and Nature to shew the Force of their Genius, and to be under a Necessity of mingling in their best Pieces the greatest Beauties, and the greatest Faults. It seems, says a modern Author *, that the English Genius hitherto hath produced only irregular Beauties. Shakespear's shining Monsters are a thousand times more pleasing than the Wisdom of modern Poets. In short, the English Poetry resembles a luxuriant Tree, which in its natural State throws out a multitude of Branches, and gives unequal Marks of a prodigious Force, and yet dies if you attempt to put a Force upon Nature, and to bring it into the Mode of the Garden at Marli.

How far off soever the English Poets may be from the Perfection and Merit, which must be allowed to those who have cultivated the French Tragedy ; it is not however impossible, that some time or other they should reach, nay go beyond them. That time will come, nay, I am persuaded it is near at hand, when the English shall correct all their Errors. Their Genius still remains, they begin by degrees to accustom themselves to the Rules, and they will in time arrive at Perfection in an Art which hitherto they have not understood. In process of time they will join the Wisdom, Majesty, Purity, and Decency of the French Theatre, to the Strength, the Sublimity, and the pathetick Energy of the English Tragedy, with an Exclusion of whatsoever is monstrous, mean, or ridiculous. The Poets of this Country have a great Advantage over others by their introducing so much Action in their Plays ; many even of the best French Pieces are in Truth but Conversations in five Acts, which we read with greater Pleasure than we see, because the Action languishes for want of a proper Variety of Incidents.

* Voltaire, Lettres Philosophiques, Let. xviii. p. 162.

The Theatres of Paris and London seem to me perfect Representations of the Characters of the two Nations. At Paris they speak ; at London they act. It is not therefore at all wonderful, that the French should speak better than the English, because every Man is Master of his own Trade. For this very Reason, the amorous Intrigues in the French Pieces are better wrought and conducted than in the English. We may venture after the same manner to determine on the Merit of the two Theatres. The Character of the French is Tenderness, Love is their prevailing Passion, it is their principal Occupation, and Gallantry is the Soul of the Court. The Language of the Heart is naturally that of the Ladies, and tho' they will now and then contradict it a little in their Behaviour, yet there is not one of them who will yield in the Dignity of her Expression to the Heroine of a Romance. It is a common Thing at Paris, to meet with a female Platonick, who reasons with the greatest Delicacy on the Inconsistency between the Communications of Sense and Affections in Persons of distinguished Birth; affirming that Love is confined only to the Heart, and to the Thoughts; and yet makes her Appointments every Night.

In France the Men speak and act in the same Manner with the Fair Sex: They declaim against Infidelity: They sometimes affect to condemn a Woman who has tript. In short, there are certain Moments when you would take a French Petit-Maitre for the Original whence a Romance Character had been drawn. But if you watch his Motions, or consider his Conduct but for four and twenty Hours, you shall be able to detect him in twenty Breaches of his System of amorous Morality.

It is natural, dear Isaac, in a Country where the Language, the Arts, the Tricks and Cheats of Love are so well understood, that they should be also well-expressed. A Painter who works after excellent Models, and who has Nature always before his Eyes, will shew more Spirit, and add more Graces to his Figures than he who paints from Idea, and the sole Strength of Imagination. Racine felt that Love which he so well expresses in his Verses. He said in Prose to Chamblé *, all that as a Poet he says to his Heroines. We owe to his Constitution and the Taste of his Nation a great Part of those Beauties which we admire in his Works. If he had been an Englishman he would without doubt have wanted this Advantage. He must, in order to have pleased, have sought some other Method of moving the Spectators than by tender Scenes, or he would have run the risque of failing, or falling into the Error of Addison at least. The Cato of that Author is a most perfect Piece if we take away a cold Love-Scene, which serves only to hinder the Attention due to the rest of the Play. If Corneille had been an English Writer, he would have lost much less than Racine; because he had all the Talents necessary to succeed on an English Theatre. The last Act of his Rhodegune is a Master-piece which ought to be admired every where, but seems particularly calculated for London.

* A celebrated Actress, with whom Racine was in Love.

The English Poets have Strokes as beautiful and as sublime as any in Corneille, but then they are not so equal; if that Author falls, it is neither so frequent, nor so perceptible; the French Poet may be indeed low in some Places, but the English are very often ridiculous. One is surprized at Paris to see so great a Genius as Corneille making Use even in his best Pieces of low Expressions, and we are apt to censure pretty freely such Thoughts of his as appear to be below the Dignity of English Tragedy. How often have the following Lines in his Nicomedes been burlesqued?

*Madame, encore un coup, cet Homme est—il a vous ;
Et, pour vous divertir, est il si necessaire,
Que vous ne lui puissies ordonner de se taire ?*

But what would our Parisians, who are so nice as to Style, say if they were to see the Julius Caesar of Shakespear represented on their Stage, in which there is a Scene where the Coblers and Taylors converse with Brutus and Cassius?

The same Reason which incline People at Paris to pass by the Faults of the great Corneille, serve at London to excuse those of Shakespear, and other tragick Poets; their ravishing and sublime Beauties strike us so much, that for the Sake of them we pass by their Faults. It is true the English Authors seem to stand in need of more Indulgence than the French; but as the Taste of that Nation is not entirely formed, many Things are as yet allowed, which will not pass in Times to come.

Love is in Possession of the Theatre at London, as well as Paris, and there are few modern Pieces in which it has not a large Share. But as I have already told you, dear Isaac, the English Poets have not so well succeeded in describing the Motions of that Passion, as in painting those of Greatness of Soul, Valour, and of publick Spirit. The Character of Cato in Addison's Tragedy is perhaps the most beautiful that ever appeared on the Theatre: that of Pompey in Cinna; that of Burrhus in Britannicus; nay, even that of Joash in Athaliah is not so shining. Yet each of these Tragedies is more perfect than that of the English Author; because he had the Weakness to please the Women, who decide all Things as well at London, as at Paris, to introduce tender Speeches, tho' he was unacquainted with the Language of Love. This has occasioned his enervating the fiercest Tragedy that perhaps ever appeared on any Stage.

When the Science of Sophocles and of Euripides comes to be thoroughly understood in England, it will be much more difficult for their Poets than for the French, to produce any thing that is excellent, and capable of satisfying the Taste of the Nation. They will then be obliged to have Complacency enough to treat of certain Subjects, and to speak of some Matters where their Wit will not shine, as in other

other Things, when the Spectator has been moved by some impetuous Speeches; when he has felt the Force of poetick Terror, and has been ravished by Strokes truly divine, he must still be softened by the Complaints of an unfortunate Love, in order to satisfy the Ladies, and the young People. It will be more difficult to touch this last Passion than any of the rest, and there will seldom appear a Genius capable of doing it.

It seems that the reigning Philosophy, and the favourite System of Politicks, maintains in England the same Authority on the Stage as in other Places. Their Poets are much more Citizens of their own Country, than of Parnassus, and it is easy to discover the Party they embrace in all their Pieces.

Farewel, dear Isaac, live happy and content.

London.

L E T T E R CXLVII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

WE see no such Thing, dear Isaac, in this Country, as People's disappearing nobody knows how; and being carried from their Families, by a Minister's Order, are suffered to sigh out the Remainder of their Days, under the Weight of Arbitrary Power, in Prisons where no Mortal can find them. A Tradesman of London has no Apprehension of being condemned without a Hearing; they they cannot keep a Man here, even in the Tower, without due Course of Law. A Lettre-de-cachet * is here an unintelligible Term. Happy Country, wherein Fear belongs only to the Guilty!

A private Man in this Kingdom is in no sort of Fear of being falsely accused by any wicked Rascal, kidnap'd thereupon from his House, and not allowed a Hearing 'till after a long Confinement. The Prejudices, nay even the Hatred of the Great, and of the Priests are harmless here. As long as a Man is honest, and does nothing to the Prejudice of Society, he is under the Protection of the Laws, and 'till he violates them, he needs be in no Pain. An Englishman needs not in the Evening run over in his Mind whatever passed in the Day's Conversation, from a dread of being hamper'd two or three Years after, for an unguarded Expression. He acts and speaks freely, and may, in case he says nothing injurious to the Laws, give his Opinion freely on any Subject. If a Minister does any thing amiss, he condemns it roundly. Inasmuch as he is a Member of Society, the Law presumes him honest, permits that he speak his Sentiments to his Friends, and secures him from falling into the Hands of a lawless Statesman, whose Power sanctifies his Errors, and stamps Authority on his wrong Steps.

They commend, dear Monceca, in this Country, the Great, if they have Merit. By the same Rule they blame them if they have none; or if their good Qualities are exceeded by their bad ones. If Cardinal Fleury was Prime Minister in England, the People of London would do him Justice, they would unanimously commend his Abilities, his Prudence, his Integrity, his Disinterestedness, his Love for Peace, and his Regard for his Master's Glory. But if instead of this truly-illustrious Minister, they had Cardinal Du Bois at the Head of their Affairs, they would without Scruple expose his Conduct, nor shew him a Grain the greater Respect on account of his Purple. In the midst of all his Greatness, he discovered the Vices of a pedantic Life, and very ill became the Rank to which he was raised ; as much above his Merit as his Birth. Whatever Liberty they might think fit to take with such a Minister, they would have been so far from fearing its costing them their Lives, that they would not have expected so much as a short Exile. At Paris, however, they would have had more Tenderness for a Man who had violated all the Laws, than one who had spoken freely of the notorious Vices of that Priest ; whom, at this day, all the World condemns. The Great and the Mob agree in detesting his ill Qualities. They cannot help admiring how he came to arrive at the Helm. Yet could he revive, and be again possessed of Power, most of those who now censure him so freely, would run as servilely as ever to offer him Incense ; the Terror of a Lettre de Cachet for a rash Expression, would keep them in a shameful Slavery, excessively detrimental to the Publick, and to the Prince, who can never be informed of the Faults of his Ministers, if the People are debarred the Freedom of Speech, and the Right of carrying their Complaints to the Foot of the Throne.

* A Lettre de Cachet is a Mandate, by which a Person is banished, or committed to Prison by the Royal Authority, not unlike our Warrants from a Secretary of State.

It is beyond all Question as much the Interests of Sovereigns, as of their Subjects, not to allow their Ministers too extensive a Power, or not to inquire into their Conduct. Because it comes frequently quently to pass, that they themselves suffer for the Blunders of those they trust. How happy would it have been for Henry III. (of France) if any Courtier of his had been sincere enough to have shewn him the Danger into which he ran headlong, by his blind Attachment, his wrong-placed Affection, and his unworthy Tenderness for his Minions? But such is the Fate of Princes! they need Counsel more than other Men, yet nobody dares give it them. An unlucky Experience hath confirmed most People's Opinion, that the Lot of such as venture to disabuse Kings, is very unfortunate. If at first such an Information is favourably received from a faithful Subject, yet it often happens the Minister finds a Way to justify himself, and his Justification induces of course the other's Destruction. Sometimes again the Minister hath no need of Excuses, his Master's Confidence is an impregnable Intrenchment; which, whoever attempts to force, is sure to perish. Heroes and great Princes are liable to Prejudices, as well as other Men. It has so happen'd, that great Monarchs have fancied their Glory some way interested in supporting those they had made choice of, tho' they knew they were unfit for the Posts they filled; of which Ghamillard and others are recent Examples.

Since then it is so dangerous, that it can scarce be expected a private Person about a Court should venture to tell important Truths to a Sovereign, true Policy requires that the People should be permitted to bring their Complaints, whatever they are, against Ministers, directly to the Throne. Otherwise all Ministers must pass for infallible with their Masters; since their Faults could neither be disclosed by particular Persons, nor the People in a Body. It is therefore impossible to remove this Mischief, so destructive to King and People, but by allowing

allowing the World to speak freely of the Virtues and Vices of great Men, and absolutely suppressing what the French call Lettres de Cachet, whereby a Minister hath any Man at his Mercy with whom he is offended; and this whether he has done any thing amiss or not.

In this Point, dear Isaac, the English are perfectly right. There is no Justice done if any Man is brought to Punishment otherwise than by open Trial, and according to the known Laws of the State. When once (under whatever Pretence) we vary from this plain Rule, we leave ourselves none; and it cannot but happen, that the Innocent will frequently suffer either thro' the Calumnies of their private Enemies, or the Resentments of the Great. Behold an Instance as conclusive as extraordinary!

In 1723 Father Fouquet, a Jesuit, returned into France, from China, where he had resided twenty-five Years, and was so unlucky as to have some Disputes with his Brethren of a religious Nature. He had taught some Chinese Doctrines not altogether consistent with the Rules of the Society, of which Memorials were carefully transmitted into Europe. Two Persons of Learning, who were Natives of China *, came over with him. The one died on board the Ship, the other, who came safe to Paris, was to go to Rome, in order to give Evidence in relation to the Conduct of the Fathers in that Part of the World, from which he came. Father Fouquet, and his Companion, lodged in the Street of St. Anthony, and as secret as they kept their Intentions, the Jesuits guessed at them, resolved to traverse them, and to be revenged. Father Fouquet, on his side, penetrated their Design, and without losing a Moment's Time, took Post one Night for

* A Man of Letters amongst the Chinese, is a Person devoted to Study, as other Men to Trades.

Rome, together with his Chinese Man of Letters. They followed with the utmost Expedition, and came up unfortunately with the latter. As the unlucky Stranger spoke not a Word of French, the Fathers applied themselves to Cardinal Du Bois, to whom at that Time they were necessary, and informing him that they had a young Man amongst them who was become crazy, desired Leave to shut him up. The Cardinal on this slight Information, granted on the Spot what he was always too liberal in granting, a Lettre de Cachet. The Lieutenant de Police, who was charged with the Execution of this Order, when he came to seize the Lunatick, found a young Man, who complimented him in the Chinese Way, who seemed to sing rather than speak, and look'd as in amaze. He expressed his Concern at his Condition, but sent him however to Charenton, where he was regularly whipped twice a Day, as the Abbé des Fontaines was since at *Biffêtre. The poor Chinese, understanding nothing of the Matter, took all this for the Custom of France; and tho' he had been but two Days at Paris, was heartily sick of their Behaviour. In this Manner he passed three Years on Bread and Water amongst the Reverend Father Floggers, and the poor distracted Creatures who were flogged, without ever comprehending there were any third Sort of People in France, but supposing it the sole Employment of one Part of the Nation, to make the other dance to the Whip. At the end of that Space of Time there happened a Change in the Ministry, and a new Lieutenant de Police was appointed. He began his Office with a Review of the Prisons belonging thereto, and visited that of the mad Folks at Charenton amongst the rest. After he had examined all who were produced, he asked if there were none yet to see? They answered but one, and that he was a poor Creature who spoke a Language nobody understood. A reverend Jesuit who accompanied this Magistrate, assured him it was a kind of Madness peculiar to this Man not to answer in French, and advised him not to call for him, because it would be to no purpose. The Lieutenant did not relish this Advice, and so the young Man was brought out. He presently fell on his Knees to that Magistrate, who caused several Persons to speak to him in Spanish, Italian, Latin, Greek, and English in vain, he only repeated the same Word, Kanton, Kanton. The Father piously affirmed he was possessed; but the Lieutenant recollecting there was such a Place in China, sent for an Interpreter, who understood Chinese, and then the Story came out. The Magistrate knew not what to do, and for once a Jesuit knew not what to say. The Duke of Bourbon, who was then at the Head of Affairs, being acquainted with the Thing, took care to have the Chinese clothed and provided for, 'till an Opportunity offered of sending him home to China; whence, it is generally thought, few Men of Letters will for the future venture in the Company of Jesuits to make the Tour of Rome.

* This Anecdote is cleared up in the first Part of Secret Memoirs of the Republick of Letters.

See, dear Isaac, how terribly these Lettres de Cachet may be abused! How many Wretches may yet labour under this Tyranny, so inconsistent with all the Rules of Justice and Equity? If a Prelate finds himself at a loss how to deal with one of his Clergy, he has nothing more to do than inform against him as a Janсенист; a Lettre de Cachet comes instantly forth, and he is disposed of for ever. A Man so exiled is so far from having it in his power to do himself Justice, by explaining his Conduct, that generally

generally speaking he is prohibited all Correspondence, and sent to reside in the midst of his Enemies; who set their Wits to work, by well-invented Stories, to keep up, and even to augment the Prejudice taken against an innocent Person. How many People within this last Age have been arrested, and lain long in loathsome Prisons, on ill-grounded Suspicions, and false Accusations? What dreadful Abuses have there been of Lettres de Cachet? And how many still subsist? To such a Height at length this Evil came, that private People counterfeited these Letters, and a Criminal was hanged with this Inscription in large Characters on his Breast, A FORGER OF LETTRES DE CACHET.

It is in vain, my Friend, that in order to justify this Practice of punishing without Trial, the absolute Power of Princes, and the Necessity of securing some Sort of People is alledged. Both these Objections are trivial. Princes ought for their own Interests to accustom the People to see all Things done according to Law. Besides, if they are Lords, they are, at least they ought to be, Fathers also to their Subjects; and Equity in this Case forbids that they should suffer the Weaker to be the Victims of the more Powerful; or that any one Man should have such Authority as to injure others with Impunity.

If there could be any Security had, that succeeding Ministers in France would resemble the present, the Prince might, without fear, intrust them with the Management of his Power without Reserve. He might be assured that it would be exercised so as to make the People happy; and they on the other hand would be so far from fearing any digressions from the ordinary Rules of Justice, that they would apprehend Lettres de Cachet Acts of Lenity, serving to to withdraw People from the too great Severities of the Law. But for one Cardinal Fleury, there are thirty Cardinals Du Bois. Is it then at all just that the People should be exposed to the Caprice of a Man, who abuses the Power of his Sovereign; or that the Lives and Liberties of Subjects should depend on the Credit their Enemies have with a Prime Minister?

The principal Care of Kings ought to be rendering their Subjects exact Justice; and thereby preventing the Small from standing in fear of the Great. It is therefore absolutely necessary, that every Man should have an Opportunity of defending himself in a legal Way, before he is condemned; and that Judgment should be pronounced by Persons absolutely impartial and unbiassed. Observe one thing, my Friend, that the Minister is commonly, if not always, an Adversary to those who suffer by these Lettres de Cachet: Does not Equity then require that there should be some Judge between a private Person, and his avow'd Adversary? What would be said of a Court of Justice, where, on the Attorney General's winding up his Harangue against the Criminals, they were hanged up without more ado? Would not all the World blame such a shameful Dependancy on the Opinion of one Man? And what in this Capacity of granting Warrants is a Minister more than a Peace-Officer? It is true, those who offend against the Laws ought to be punished; but then they ought also to be punished according as the Law directs.

The fatal Effects which follow wherever there are evil Ministers, the Bloodshed and Murders they occasion, the Proscriptions which they are but too ready to attempt on very slight Provocations, are but too strong Motives to induce Sovereigns to act cautiously in the Powers they indulge them, and not to suffer them to act but according to the Rules which Justice prescribes. It is not easy to say whether Princes or private Men are most concerned to see Justice administered steadily, according to the established Rules, and with the utmost Solemnity. If the People have just Cause to tremble at the despotic Power of absolute Ministers, their Masters have no less Cause to be alarmed if they consider their desperate Effects. If they could but know sometimes how much they stand indebted to such as oppose their Ministers, and those whom they intrust with their Affairs, far from allowing them to be oppressed, they would hear and make use of their Counsels.
and

As to the rest, dear Isaac, I am sensible enough, that let a Minister be ever so able, there will be uneasy and malicious Men, who will oppose, thwart, and misrepresent his Actions, however wise, however useful. It is not such sort of Folks I would have Kings regard, who are in truth but bad Subjects, as well as indifferent Men. When I speak of Princes listening to private Informations, I suppose them always to come from Persons of known Probity, and remarkably well affected. It would be ridiculous indeed to expect a Monarch should listen to the Clamour of a few seditious People. That would be an Evil not much inferior to the former, since it is certain the greatest and the best cannot vanquish Envy.

Cardinal Fleury in all Probability will one Day be more respected by Posterity, than Cardinal Richelieu; at least, I am persuaded that all Philosophick Judges of Mankind will prefer him to all the Ministers that have been in France. But this however does not hinder some from being blind enough, or Knaves enough not to acknowledge his Virtues.

Sir Robert Walpole, who is the Minister here, is a Man of a vast penetrating and sublime Genius, and is no less solicitous for the Good of his Country, than attentive to whatever concerns the Glory of his Master. He supports with wonderful Capacity and consummate Prudence the whole Weight of publick Affairs. He has carried Commerce and Credit to the highest Pitch. However, Multitudes declaim against him: He has indeed more Enemies than the French Minister. In spite however of their impotent Clamour, not only the most reasonable People among the English, but all Europe in general do Justice to his Capacity, and applaud his Merit. It is very possible his Enemies would be more moderate if his Qualifications were less conspicuous. I am thinking, Isaac, while I write, that if by any Accident this Letter had fallen into the Hands of an English Malecontent, he would not fail to assure you these Praises were bestowed for certain Reasons which he would have the Charity to guess at. Nor would he ever admit, that I, tho' a Jew, a Stranger in England, and unknown at Court, would commend a Person merely because I thought him commendable.

Fare thee well, dear Isaac, live happy and content, and may the God of our Fathers cover thee with Prosperities.

London.

L E T T E R CXLVIII.

JACOB BRITO, to AARON MONCECA.

BAD Weather and contrary Winds, dear Monceca, have hindred my embarking. I wait with great Impatience the happy Moment when I shall quit this Country. In spite of my Disguise, notwithstanding all the Precautions I take, I am under mortal Inquietudes. I am terrified when I consider the Avarice of the Monks, and I perfectly tremble, when I call to mind their excessive Power in this Place. Yet excessive as it is, it is much less so than ever it was in times past; judge then to what a Length it was once carried, and with what Insolence and Tyranny they abused it.

There has happened here within these few Days an Adventure very mortifying for the Priests. The Goaler and his Archers who have the Custody of the Prison of the Officiality, committed all sorts of Crimes. They robbed, beat, abused the Prisoners at their pleasure, and gave all the Liberty they could desire to some who had it in their power to pay for it; so that the most guilty were favoured most. The Corregidor, or chief Magistrate of the City being informed of these Irregularities, caused the Goaler and some of his Mirmidons to be apprehended and conducted to the publick Prisons. Upon this the Patriarch took fire, as supposing himself bound at all Events to support these Rascals, because they depended on his Jurisdiction. He therefore excommunicated the Corregidor immediately, as guilty of a great and notorious Crime. That Magistrate being extremely sensible of this Affront, appealed to the King, informed him of the injurious Treatment he had received, and met with the Redress he expected. The King easily apprehended that the Insult offered to this Magistrate reflected on the Crown, and that his Majesty's Authority was wounded by this Act of Presumption in the Patriarch. In fine, he was compelled to recall his Excommunication, and even to write a very polite Epistle to the Corregidor, beseeching him to excuse the Rashness he had shewn in endeavouring to exclude him from the Communion of the Faithful.

Corre-

This just and commendable Action of the King's, which in any other Country would pass for an ordinary Occurrence, it belonging to the Royal Authority to do Justice in all Cases to its Subjects, is looked on here at Lisbon as a very bold Thing, and worthy of the most heroick Courage. The French could not make more to do about the Pyramid which Lewis XIV. caused to be erected in the midst of Rome, than the wisest of the Portuguese do about this Action, so glorious for the King, so equitable for the Magistrates, and so mortifying to the Ecclesiasticks. This will however appear the less extraordinary, if you consider the Difference between the Characters of the French and Portuguese: You will then easily acknowledge that it was not more difficult for the Monarch of France to humble the Pope, than for the King of Portugal to check the Pride of the Patriarch, who is revered as a kind of Divinity by seven Eights of his Subjects.

Whenever at Paris the Sovereign is inclined to act against the Roman Pontiff, all things favour his Design. The Parliament sees its mortal Enemy humbled with Pleasure. Many Ecclesiasticks bless the Hand which protects the Rights of the Gallican Church. The People are thankful for the Preservation of their Liberties. And as for the Great, those everlasting Slaves of the Throne, ready to turn Turks if the King put on a Turban, they go to bed Molinists and rise Jansenists, as their Interests direct them. Their Concern for their Fortunes regulates their Faith. If Circumcision was the only Road to Preferment how many Brethren, dear Monceca, should we have at Court?

People in Portugal think in quite another Way. The Priests, the Monks, and the Inquisitors are all concerned in supporting the Authority of their Chief; any Attempt on him rouses them all. A prodigious Croud of bigotted Laicks, instead of opposing the Invasions of the Ecclesiasticks, respectfully kiss the Cords with which they are bound. The People in general, grossly superstitious, never distinguish between the Interests of Priests and that of Religion. Blind alike in Judgment and in Conduct, to what Excess may they not be carried when influenced by the Authors of their Enthusiasm? There remains therefore to support the King in any such Design of moderating the Power of the Clergy, only such as in spite of national Delusion have the Courage to make use of their Reason. Amongst these we may generally reckon the Men of Quality whom a good Education and Conversation with the World hath qualified to see farther than others into the Frauds of Priests, the Avarice of Churchmen and the Difference between the Interest of Religion and that of the Clergy. But however considerable this Success may be, it is not to be compared with the Facility the King of France meets with in the Prosecution of the like Design. There is therefore as high a Spirit, and as great a Degree of Courage necessary to do small Things at Lisbon, as to perform great and celebrated Exploits at Paris.

The reigning King of Portugal has had several Struggles with the Court of Rome. He has indeed done what none of his Predecessors durst attempt. And by his Firmness he has always hindred them from carrying their Point. Happily for himself and his Kingdom, he is always ready to hear the Advice of true Patriots, and which is more, to follow when he has heard it.

The Misfortunes which Don Sebastian drew upon himself, by blindly and imprudently following the Advices of Monks, ought to deter all future Kings of Portugal from such a Proceeding. That unfortunate Monarch ruined himself by yielding to the Persuasions of some Jesuits he had about him, who engaged him to give the Moors Battle, tho' their Army was three times as strong as his own. These Priests flattered him with the Hopes of miraculous Assistance. But alas this failed! and that imprudent and unhappy Prince paid with his Life for his Weakness and Credulity; a just indeed, but sure a severe Chastisement for his Facility in suffering himself to be directed by Monks in Things so remote from their Profession, as is whatever relates to Arms.

The Fate of Don Sebastian was so much the more unhappy, since many have inclined to think that the Jesuits gave him this Advice on purpose to destroy him. Tho' this is a Thing by no means certain, yet some have ventured to adopt it as an indubitable Truth. Some there are, says Brantome *, who assure us, that the Jesuits did and said all with good Intention: Others again suppose they were seduced and corrupted by the King of Spain, to push this unfortunate young Prince, too full of Courage and of Fire, on his Fate, that the Spanish Monarch might the more easily seize what it is certain he afterwards did seize.

* Dames Galantes, Tom. II. p. 83.

If, dear Monceca, you should inquire what my Judgment is in respect to this Dispute, I must freely own that it is a Doubt with me which Opinion has the greatest Appearance of Truth. It may be alledged that this ought to be added to the long List of imaginary Crimes which the Enemies of the Jesuits have placed to their Account, as no doubt that such a List there is: But then it may be on the other hand suggested, that it is by no means improbable that the Jesuits, so much at that time devoted to the King of Spain, should take this Step, in order to his acquiring Dominions he had already swallowed in Imagination, since in that case, they only acted in reality in Portugal, what most zealously, as well as basely, they endeavoured to bring to pass in France in the Times of the League.

Don Sebastian is not the sole Monarch who has fallen thro' too great confidence in Priests. Louis King of Hungary was slain in a Battle against the Turks, which Engagement was owing to the obstinate Persuasions of a Cardinal in whom he had too great trust. A French King of the same Name, after he had, at the solicitation of the Clergy, made many Wars, as bloody and without use to his Kingdom, as cruel and unjust with respect to his unhappy Subjects, went at last to fall amidst the Ruins of Carthage, where perish'd with him, at least, one half of a gallant Army, which he had transported from France into Africk.

One of the greatest Mischiefs which, in my Opinion, dear Monceca, can befall a Sovereign, is his paying any sort of Attention to a Set of People, who, void of all Knowledge in the Affairs of the World, are full of a wild as well as false Zeal for Religion; which induces them to approve and execute, as far as they can, the most extravagant Designs. A Man who has Capacity enough to direct thirty Devotees, may and must want the Talents necessary to govern a Kingdom. States are not regulated as Convents are, nor must we expect from Subjects what Superiors look for from their Monks. Yet how often have we seen Princes shrinking into the despicable character of Slaves to their Confessors, and learning at the feet of their Clergy what ought to be the fate of their People, 'till they became themselves the mere Organs of a Monk or Priest? Among the Protestants, where the Clergy pretend to keep to their Institution and to stick to their Duty, there are too many for directing their Masters. What amazing Alterations in the Affairs of England, nay and of the Affairs of the High Allies, were produced by the political Sermons of one Sacheverel? Elsewhere have we not seen a certain Preacher, tolerably bright for a Norman, giving himself the Airs of a Statesman, and treating cavalierly enough the evangelick Ministry? In a word, is it not generally remarked, that every where these People are but too well heard?
void

Happy is the Prince who knows how to make a right Choice of those he honours with his Confidence. It is on that Choice his Glory and his Peace depend. How many Sovereigns stand distinguished to Posterity, who were perhaps but Men of moderate Parts, and would have appeared so, but for their Ministers of State. The Epithet of Great so liberally bestowed on Princes, would in most Cases, if narrowly scann'd, belong rather to their Ministers. Unassisted by Agrippa and Mecænas, where should we have placed Au- gustus? The History of Louis XIII. what is it but the shining Acts of Richelieu? Louis XIV. was indeed a great King; but the Condés, the Turennes, as well as the Louvois and Colberts, had no small Share in acquiring the Glories of his Reign. The Monarch now reigning in France hath a thousand and a thousand Virtues, worthy the Esteem of remote Posterity. He possesses above all, that Sweetness, that Benificence, that Wisdom and Piety which rendered Titus the Master of the Hearts of Mankind. These Qualifications are never the less his, on account of the Obligations he owes to that wise Minister he has chosen to direct his Councils. If Burrhus and Seneca had not been succeeded by Narcissus, Nero had been always virtuous. It was the Minions of Henry III. misled and ruined that unhappy Prince.

In all Situations of Life, evil Counsellors and wicked Acquaintance are dangerous. But they are still more so to Princes. A private Man will find a thousand Persons ready to open his Eyes, by reproaching him with the wrong Steps into which bad Advice drew him, whereas Courtiers approve and applaud whatever the Prince does, be it ever so bad; so that he has no Resource but to the Advice of some faithful Friend, to whom he accords the Liberty of speaking freely. There are but few Princes wise enough to act thus, which is the Reason why there are few Princes who escape suffering by a contrary Conduct, and which is still worse, all their Faults recur on a Multitude of innocent People; who, tho' they have no part in their Offences, suffer for them*. The Errors of Princes are desperate Scourges for their Subjects. The Plague is more merciful to Men than the mad Ambition of Princes to their Neighbours. Famine cannot reduce a Country so low as it may be brought by the Luxury and Vanity of a Prince criminally avaricious of what is the Produce of his Subjects Labours and Sweat, and prodigal at the same time of his own Revenue to a flattering Courtier, or some faithless Concubine. Rain, Storms, and Inundations do not mischief People more than a Prince's idle Love, or the Pensions paid to corrupt the Ministers of his Neighbours.

* Quidquid delirant Reges plectuntur Achivi.

Happy are those Nations where Monarchs study to act like tutelary Deities, by preserving Peace and Abundance to their Subjects, without expecting they should erect Temples in their Turns any where but in their Hearts. Such were the Sentiments of those excellent Monarchs who seem born for the Good of Mankind, and who were anciently through Gratitude number'd with the Gods. Those Heroes, who placed all Sense of Greatness in the Good they did to others; what would they have thought if they had seen one King stiled Great, for destroying a whole People, and establish his Glory on Rapine and Murder? Another Magnificent, for impoverishing his Subjects? And a third Intrepid for his Delight in Slaughter? They would have thought no doubt such Titles very ill bestowed.

Farewel, dear Monceca, live content and happy, and may the God of our Fathers bless thee with Abundance.

Lisbon.

L E T T E R CXLIX.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

I Wrote you some Days ago, my dear Isaac, my Sentiments as to the Merits of the English Tragic Poets: I shall now proceed to give my Judgment on the Comic Writers. They seem to me to exceed those I mentioned first a good deal. I went yesterday to a Comedy, and I was very well satisfied with the Performance. The Characters were in Nature, the Plot well laid, the Style chaste, &c. and which was much more important, the Moral was wholesome and just, accompanied with a strong, well-turned Vein of Humour. This Piece fell from the Pen of Congreve, the best, the wisest, and the most modest of all the English Authors in this way. It had been well if Wycherley and Vanbrugh had wrote as perfectly. Their Works, to speak the Truth, are full of bold Strokes, and abound with Wit, but they too often bear hard on Modesty, and make the Stage an Engine of Corruption, whereas it ought to be a School of Morals.

It is without hesitation, my dear Friend; that I place the best Pieces of Moliere far above the Productions of Wycherley. Besides their surpassing them in Delicacy, they also are exactly suited to the Decency which ought to appear in all publick Spectacles, in order to free them from any Dread of those too zealous Doctors ever burning with a strong Inclination to decry them. The best Argument which we can possibly use in favour of the Theatre, is its Usefulness in correcting Manners. The Spectacles or publick Representations of the present Age are certainly adorned with Sentiments which render them very instructive. - Few People of Rank are very attentive at Sermons, whereas at the Play-house they mind what is said well enough. I dare say therefore, that Moliere's Comedies have done more Service among the Courtiers, than the Sermons of Bourdaloüe and Massillon. Without teizing you with Examples, do but remember how much Good was done by that single Play of Precieuses ridicules. But for that excellent Comedy, the French, and their Neighbours in Imitation of them, had to this day affected Manners stiff, impertinent, and unnatural, and had delivered themselves up to an affected-way of speaking, which was the Mode for several Years among a Multitude of People. If we drive from the Stage that Modesty which is a necessary part of good Manners: if instead of amending the Heart while we amuse the Imagination, we do our utmost to corrupt both, by giving seducing Pictures of Vice, as in the little Entertainments of Dansour and other Pieces of the like Stamp; whatever Genius may appear in the Execution, we ought only to be regarded in the same Light with Poisoners, who afford, if they can, an agreeable Flavour to make their mortal Drenches go the more easily down.
of

Wycherley seems to have collected with the utmost care the Subjects capable of admitting a criminal Intrigue; those which did not admit one, he forced to that Purpose, and even such Pieces as he purloin'd from Moliere he corrupted to his Taste. That Comedy wherein he has made use of L'Ecole de Femmes, though full of Fire, and by no means deficient in Wit, is yet far short of the Wisdom discoverable in his Model. Instead of Moliere's Sagacity in making a future Husband risque his Spouse's Fidelity, and his Caution in avoiding any Expression tending to a Breach of Decorum, Wycherley introduces a Man pretending to be a Eunuch, and letting all the World into the Secret of his Incapacity: The Husbands charmed with such an innocent Inamorato, bring their Wives readily into his Company. The false Origen having made choice of a Country Lady, obtains of her the last Favours; and if, unluckily for the English, their comic Writers were not somewhat nicer than their tragic Poets, they might have in the conclusion of the Play a very fine Scene on the Stage, at least in their way. There could not certainly be any thing in it more shocking or absurd than in the introducing in a Tragedy a Husband strangling his Wife with his own Hands, a Thing the English see not only without Horror, but with all the Marks of Admiration in the Moor of Venice.

One may venture to affirm, my Friend, that if the Writers of English Tragedies are to be justly charged with offending against the Rules of their Art, the comic Authors are not less culpable in respect to their Transgressions against Modesty and good Manners. The latter are indeed more perfect in their way. Wycherley and Vanbrugh come nearer to Terence and Moliere, than Dryden and Shakespear to Sophocles and Euripides, Corneille and Racine. We sometimes meet in their Works with Strokes bolder and more sparkling than in the Greek, Latin, or French Poets; but the Lustre of these fine Things is more than obscured by long Passages utterly irreconcilable to Decency and and Decorum, and wherein the Authors seem lost to Shame.

Congreve's Pieces are the most perfect Comedies the English have. He is indeed a worthy Rival of the great Moliere, and hath perhaps fewer Faults than he. Congreve is exact, lively, prudent, cautious in his Expressions, and who never runs into low ridiculous Pleasantries purely to keep up the Laugh. He is thoroughly acquainted with Mankind, and all his Characters are natural, full of Truth, and exceedingly striking. If the English Comedies in general were as good as his, the Theatre of London would surpass that of Paris; but in the first place his Plays are but few, and in the next few of their Authors come near him.

The meanest of the comic Writers in this Country have a Custom pleasant enough. They pillage Moliere, they disfigure his best Pieces, and criticise him with the utmost Insolence. That Author is really as ill-treated in England, as Homer, Virgil, Horace, &c. by the Adversaries of the Ancients. All the Dabblers in Parnassus open against him as a common Enemy, and yet do their utmost to make their miserable Pieces go off, by interlarding them with Sentiments stole from him; it is true they manage these so sordidly, that if one was to form a Judgment of Moliere by the Samples they give us, we should condemn that illustrious Writer without Mercy. But what Effect on his Reputation can the Attempts of these Blotters of Paper ever have, or what can a few Authors of miserable damned Farces say to prejudice him? I am assured that Congreve has the highest Esteem in the World for Moliere's Writings, and no Poet of Eminence among the English ever decried his Plays. How is it possible to be so prejudiced, as not to be sensible of the Delicacy, the Salt, the good Sense, which reigns in his Tartuffe, his Misanthrope, his School of Women, and his Learned Ladies? Corneille and Racine never put Pen to Paper against Sophocles or Euripides. On the contrary, they gave those Authors all the Praises they could bestow. Boileau and Pope are zealous Advocates for the Honour of Homer and Virgil; is it not surprizing, that only the Peraults, the Terrassens, and other second-rate Authors should form the ridiculous Design of tarnishing the Glory of those ancient Heroes? Scarron, d'Affouci, and Marivaux, who in attempting to travesty Virgil, Ovid, and Fenelon have rendered themselves ridiculous, are however far less blameable than these People, because they had still high Thoughts of their Originals, tho' they drew after them miserable Copies.

Delicacy

It seems in the learned World a necessary Consequence of attaining a certain Pitch of Reputation to be attacked by these Zoilus's, the Scum and Offscouring of Letters. I do not know, Isaac, whether ever it might enter your Head to consider the Number of bad Books written against the best Authors. There is not one, however eminent, who has escaped Criticism; and which is worse, those who venture to carp at them, do it as if they were every way their Superiors, and were taking to task the Works of Bonnetcorse or Pradon.

Not to speak of the impertinent Parallel between the Ancients and Moderns, in which they have shewn less care to demonstrate the Equality between the Ages of Louis XIV. and Augustus, than to injure the Characters of the Greeks and Romans, how many miserable Criticisms have we seen against the Tragedies of Corneille, Racine, Crebillon, and Voltaire? It is true, their Performances are applauded notwithstanding, and these silly Attacks are forgot ; yet it is still true, that such things were once published, and that there were not wanting Fools who admired them.
are

Is it not a certain Truth, that a Folio was published against Bayle's Dictionary ? It is owned that Men of Taste laughed at the Attempt. However it was approved by some half-letter'd Folks, nor was the Contempt of good Judges sufficient to hinder the Sale of this dull Piece among those who buy at Random, and whose indigested Collections are not so properly Bibliothèques as Bibliotaphs. You must allow me this Word in order to express a place where dead Books are buried.

A certain Monk * was weak enough to publish a Dissertation full of Invectives against the Characters of la Bruyere. Some Numsculls had the Patience to read it, and others of their Brethren would still afford it that Honour, if the Translator of Locke had not taken the pains to exhibit the Nakedness of that Criticism to the Publick.

Montaigne long after his Death sustained the Spite of the Jansenists. Certainly his Works are in as much Esteem as ever, while the Criticism would scarce be remembred if it was not taken notice of in the Preface to the last Editions of that Author's Essays.

Dr Stillingfleet wrote against Locke. By good luck his Criticism was never translated ; so that it was never known to a great part of Europe, otherwise it would without question have had its Admirers.

The Fate of so many excellent Works hath almost induced me to believe it ought to be accounted one of the Marks of a good Book, that it hath been criticized. If this was certain, one would allow that the Journalists of Trevoux have for many Years past done the Labours of the Jansenists great Service, as well as to those of Protestants and other Adversaries, by not allowing one of them to be tolerable. In order to be even with them, I have often thought that instead of that foolish insipid Thing called Novelles Ecclesiastiques, they ought to set up some kind of literary Journal, and therein tear without Mercy the fine Writings of Petau, Sirmond, Bourdaloue, de la Rue, Daniel, &c. and cry up the poor Performances of nameless Authors, who with all the Rage of Party abused the Society. But indubitably they have been discouraged from this by the bad Reception given to the Journal de Trevoux. They must have perceived that the Publick hath long disregarded what is said of many Books in that Molinist Journal, and conjectured from thence what Favour would be shewn to a Jansenist Collection in the same Taste. They have therefore made it their Choice to bring out a weekly Sheet suited to the Genius of the Many, hoping by these Courses thro' the open Country to do some mischief to an Enemy possessed of all the Places of Strength. Happy for them that their Adversaries have also run themselves into Extravagancies, and thereby ruined their Credit, which would otherwise have been much better than that of the Jansenists. Infinite Numbers of Persons of Judgment have been disgusted, when on considering the Conduct of both Parties closely, they have been convinced that they are equally animated by Rage and Resentment.

* A Carthusian who wrote under the Nome de Guerre of Vigneul-Marville.

If we speak the Truth, dear Isaac, we must confess that when one reflects coolly on the Transactions in the Republick of Letters, one is provoked voked to see how little Sincerity appears, and how much Injustice and Partiality is evident in the Criticisms and Decisions of the Learned, in regard to the Writings of their Adversaries.

Fare thee well, my dear Friend, live content and happy, and never embarrass thyself with captious or testy People.

L E T T E R C L.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE greatest Philosophers fall sometimes, dear Isaac, into the same Faults and Puerilities with which they reproach their Adversaries. They forget those Principles on which they establish their own Arguments against scholastic Chimæras. They affect to establish such strange Opinions, and to explain such inexplicable Things, that we turn, with Justice, upon themselves their Criticisms on certain Authors whom they have treated with sovereign Contempt.

Observe, my Friend, how Mallebranche hath explained himself on the bold and yet ill-founded Decisions of Aristotle. Certainly an extraordinary measure of Faith is necessary in order to credit what Aristotle thus advances when he affords only Logical Proofs, and when he explains the Effects of Nature no otherwisethan by the confused Notions of Sense, especially when he decides roundly on Questions which seem above human reach. He therefore tells us, very often as well as peremptorily, that

that we are to take his Word, it being a settled Point with this Author, that a Disciple is to believe. *

What think you, my dear Isaac, of a Philosopher who condemns so expressly, such as advance Opinions which they can neither prove nor explain clearly, and yet decides, with an air of Authority, on the Cause of Evil with respect to Mankind, and explains philosophically the Justice of the Deity with regard to the Damnation of Children, which some Nazarenes hold inevitable tho' they die in the Cradle, if they have not gone thro' a certain Ceremony which is equivalent to Circumcision amongst us. If Mallebranche had said simply what every Man of Sense ought to say, that he submitted the Lights he derived from Nature to the Dictates of Faith, according to the Notions entertained of such Mysteries by his Church, and had alledged he believed that Children were damned, even who died in their Cradles, because he apprehended it to be so revealed, and therefore received it as an Article of Faith, he would have merited Praise for knowing how to set bounds to human Curiosity; but instead of this, he has gone further than ever Aristotle did, whom he reproaches, and has said more extravagant Things, and attempted to explain more unintelligible Mysteries in four Lines than the Greek Philosopher has discovered in his eight Books of Physicks.

Behold, my Friend, the pompous and sublime Galimatias, by which Mallebranche would prove that it is reconcilable to the Divine Justice to punish an Infant for a Sin in which it had no part. A Mother, says this Philosopher, whose Brain is full of Traces which must have been left by Objects introduced by the Senses, and which she could not efface by reason of the Concupiscence reigning in her, as having not Power over her Body, communicates them to her Child, who, springing from her is a Sinner tho' she herself may be just. The Mother is just because she actually loves or hath loved God by choice, neither doth Concupiscence render her criminal tho' she may have followed its Motions in Sleep. But the Infant she carries having never loved God by choice, nor ever turned its Heart towards him, it is most evidently in Disorder and Blindness, nor can there be any thing in it but what is worthy of his Wrath.

* Mallebranche. Recherche de la Verité. Livr. ii. pag. 18.

I don't know whether you observe that all these sublime Illusions are reducible to this: A Mother brings forth a Son a Sinner, because she communicates to him the Concupiscence, of which she is guilty. She hath however a power of delivering herself, because she is at liberty to use her Reason and to love the Deity; whereas her Son ought to be damned, as not having the Faculty of reflecting on himself, and the power of loving God.

Do you not perceive a fine Chain of Reasoning flowing from excellent Principles? I will, for a Moment, suppose myself that Aristotle, whom Mallebranche has so grievously insulted. Tell me, would I say to him, thou French Metaphysician, who inform'd you that a Mother could communicate to a Creature incapable of Reflection, concupiscent Desires, which ought to render it miserable? What Proofs have you that it is consistent with God's Justice to punish an Innocent for a Fault committed without its Knowledge, and also thro' Necessity? Be pleased, if you think it possible, to shew me how an Infant in its Mother's Womb can resist the Impressions it receives from her? If then it is incapable of Resistance and is obliged to follow the general Laws of Nature, is it not ridiculous to say that it is punished for doing what was necessary for it to do? I would rather chuse to say that a Child becomes a Sinner after it is born, by sucking the Milk of a Nurse who is a Sinner, than to ascribe it to the Impression made thereon in its Mother's Womb. The first of these Positions is less repugnant to good Sense, because a Child may live without sucking, but not without feeling the Motions communicable by his Mother while he remains within her.

You must own, my good Friend, this is a pleasant way of explaining the Source of human Misery. What would the ancient Greek Philosophers say could they return to Life again, to those French Wits who have dealt with them so sharply, and who are yet for explaining Original Sin as some Physicians account for the Marks or Blemishes with which Children are born.

The Conclusion drawn by Mallebranche is still more absurd than the Principle from which he draws it; after shewing the Manner in which Infants become Criminals, he concludes, that not having the Power of knowing God, and of consequence of repenting and seeing their Faults, it is but just they should be damned.

Is there any thing more extraordinary than to suppose what is so opposite to any rational Idea of God, that he should punish such Creatures of his as have not only no power of resisting Sin or of repenting of it, but which is much worse, have really no use of Reason, and act only by a kind of Instinct? For I cannot apprehend, that even Father Mallebranche would assert that a Child in the Womb ought to be a Doctor of the Sorbonne, and in consequence thereof, know that one who loves not God by a Love of Choice, and whose Heart is not turned towards the Deity, is not in any other State than that of Disorder and Blindness, and in which there is nothing but what merits the Wrath of God. An Infant is ignorant of all this, even many Years after its Birth. How then should it have any such Ideas in its Mother's

Mother's Womb? If then it has no sort of Notion either of Good or Evil, and its Soul, tho' of a spiritual Nature acts as yet, but as the Germ in a Plant, is there not a visible Absurdity in saying it is punished on account of the Matter which serves for its Aliment?

When certain Nazarene Doctors attempt to give Philosophical Reasons in support of this Doctrine, I fancy to myself so many Fools arguing for the cutting down of Orange-Trees, because the Gardner who planted them had done something amiss. A Man of Learning must lay his Account with saying very silly Things, when he will, by the Light of his Reason, endeavour to explain Points of pure Revelation. By it we are directed to believe Mysteries. Let us believe them then without allowing Reason, under pretence of explaining, to render them incredible by making them appear absurd.

It is however certain, that if we embrace this Sentiment, it brings along with it great Difficulties. If one ought, it will be said, to submit blindly to what we are assured has been revealed, there is nothing but may be supported by Revelation. In all Religions, in the Jewish, the Nazarene, the Mohammedan, the most absurd Chimæras are received. How many ridiculous things do many of the Rabbies, an infinite Number of Christian Divines, and Multitudes of Dervises and other Turkish Enthusiasts, pretend to have been positively revealed? To this I answer, that we ought to examine carefully if a Thing hath been reveal'd or not. But I say, that this Inquiry finished and we thoroughly assured that a Thing hath been revealed, there remains no more room for Doubts about it.

When I assert that a Jew should submit his Understanding to Revelation, I do not mean that he should receive and adopt all the Notions of the Rabbies as
so

so many Articles of Faith ; if they attempt to impose on him an Error, let him, as soon as he has seriously and thoroughly considered, reject it. But if any Doubts enter his Mind, as to Facts recorded in the Holy Scriptures, the Authenticity of those Books and their Revelation should incline him to humble himself and to receive them implicitly, without seeking by human Reasons to explain divine Mysteries ; lest, by sharing the presumptuous Folly of Mallebranche in such an Undertaking, he should, as he inevitably must, expose himself to those Reproaches which are very justly bestowed on that vain Philosopher.

I return, my dear Isaac, to my first Idea. Is it not very surprizing that a great Genius, an Author of the first Class, who sees so clearly the Giddiness of another Writer and his gross Mistakes as to refute them invincibly, should nevertheless fall immediately after into the same Errors, without perceiving that he acted therein directly opposite to his own Principles, or at least to those on which it became, in his Opinion, a Philosopher to argue ? Such a deplorable Blindness is a very sensible Proof of the Weakness of Human Understanding, and of that foolish Prejudice a Man is apt to entertain for whatever comes from himself ; he fancies there is nothing hid beyond his reach, yet he condemns others for having attempted to explain unintelligible Things ; but fancies, at the same time, a Power in himself of succeeding even in those things which he censured others for attempting. Most of our Modern Philosophers, and the Metaphysicians especially, have done nothing but added new Mistakes to those which the Ancients left behind them, and for which they insulted them so grossly, as themselves will be, in process of time, by their Successors, who probably will do nothing more than augment the the Doubts and Incertainties with which Philosophy is already encumbred.

To me it seems probable that the outrageous Criticisms of each other's Systems which the Philosophers daily publish, are the just Punishments of their Pride. To this I am the rather led, because I have always observed, that in the same Proportion a Man is vain of his Discoveries, his Enemy contemns them. The Fate of Aristotle of late is little better than that of Cotin and Pradon. The Cartesians have carried their Aversion to excess, they take no pains to distinguish the good from the bad, but condemn, without distinction, all the Works of the Greek Philosopher, tho' there are abundance of useful things in them. If the great Tutor of Alexander were to revisit the World, he would be surprized to see his Works, which made formerly such a noise, now valued only by a few Monks. His single Consolation would be, to see the same Fate attend his two great Antagonists Descartes and Mallebranche, whose Works grow daily into Discredit. The Prudence, the Sincerity, the Candor, the Penetration of those of Locke, have drawn all the wiser part of the Logicians and Metaphysicians to his Party; on the other hand, those who study Physics are all become Disciples of Newton. And the extraordinary Modesty with which these two Philosophers have delivered their Opinions, will effectually secure them from a like reverse of Fortune.

Adieu, dear Isaac, may the God of our Fathers continue to heap on thee his Blessings.

LETTER CLI.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

I Have met, dear Isaac, here in England, with a Cabalist, whom I first became acquainted with at Hamburgh. After complimenting him on his safe Arrival, I intreated him to allow me the Honour of conversing with him some time during his Stay in this City. I give you my Consent, said he, with a great deal of Pleasure to what you desire, and I promise you that I will not conceal from you any of the Mysteries of our Art. Charmed with so frank an Offer, as well as with the Opportunity of knowing whether there was any thing real in that Science or no, I thanked him in the warmest and tenderest manner Words would permit. I am willing, continued he, to begin this very Day to explain to you the first Principles of Hermetick Philosophy. Let us go take a Walk in some proper Place, where we need apprehend no Interruption I readily followed my new Master, and took a Seat with him in the Corner of a publick Garden, which is so far from being over-frequented, that it sometimes looks like a Desert.

We were hardly set down when the Cabbalist lifted his Eyes to Heaven, kept silence for some Minutes, and seemed to be wrapt in a profound Contemplation. Then coming to himself again,
 he

he fetched a deep Sigh, asking me if I had never read any Books treating of their Art? I answered him, that I had looked over several, but that I found them so obscure, that they had absolutely deprived me of all Hopes of being able to find out their Sense. At these Words the Cabbalist fetched another deep Sigh. "See, said he, the " sad Effects of the Wickedness of Men. The " Sages are obliged to veil, and to conceal the " Knowledge of the Treasures which they possess
 " even from Men of worth, who ought to " participate of them, through a Fear that wicked and prophane People should make use of " their Writings. All the learned Secretaries of " Nature have therefore chosen to write so obscurely as to render it simply impossible to penetrate the Meaning of their Discourses, unless " enlightened by the Holy Spirit, or by some Master of the Art. Insomuch that these illustrious " Philosophers plainly avow, that they write not
 " for all sorts of Readers, but for the chosen " Scholars of the golden Doctrine*. Agmon, the " great Agmon, towards the End of the Turb †, " delivers himself thus. If we had not multiplied the Names of the Art, and taken Pains to

* See the Proem to the Introduction, or School of the transmuting metallick Philosophy, by David de Planis Campy, p. 1.

† The Turb is a Collection of all the Visions which they ridiculously ascribe to the ancient Philosophers whom they suppose to have been acquainted with the Art of making Gold, among whom they reckon Aristotle, Socrates, and Pythagoras. In this Book also are contained all the Follies of the Cabbalists. The Turb is in short the Talmud and the Alcoran of the Artists, and contains yet more absurd Things than those Collections of extravagant Fables.

“ obscure it, our Scholars had by this time prophaned
 “ it, and brought it into Contempt. If I, says the “ illustrious Rasis, was to reveal its Mysteries,
 “ there would be no longer any Difference between “ the Sage and the Simple. The Almighty, as Ra- “ son writes in the same Book, hath obliged the “ Philosophers not to teach this Art to the Vulgar, “ lest the World should perish. For this cause the “ Philosophers have carefully concealed that precious “ Medicine, because it enlivens and conserves all “ Things in an equal Temperament. For if all “ Men were alike rich, none would obey others,
 “ there would be no longer either Rule or Order in “ the World.

“ These Reasons, continued the Cabbalist, are “ as you see so essential, that the Philosophers are “ tied down by them not to write but in this ob“ scure Manner, and so as only to be understood
 “ by such as are initiated in the sacred Mysteries.
 “ But that which is a farther Check, and binds
 “ them to a still closer Silence, is the barbarous
 “ and inhuman Treatment such Men have met “ with, as through a fatal Easiness have been in “ this respect guilty of some Indiscretion. There “ are a Multitude of tragical Histories whence “ Examples of this sort might be drawn. The “ unfortunate Hermit who trusted Braggardin died
 “ by the Hand of that Robber. Richard the “ Englishman, who confided his Secret to a King “ of that Country, was put to death in the “ Tower. You see then, how much the Philo-“ sopers are interested in the Observation of this “ Rule, of either keeping a profound Silence, or “ speaking in a Language intelligible only to “ their Disciples.”

To what End then, said I, do you write Books upon your Art, since they are intelligible only to such as have no need of them, because they already know what they contain. You ought, I think, to avoid publishing Books which serve only to make Fools of Men of avaricious Tempers, and to reduce them to an extreme Poverty; the just Chastisement of their not being content with moderate Wealth, sufficient for the Supply of their Necessities.

“ I perceive clearly, said my new Master, that “ you look upon the Books of our Science, to “ be much more unintelligible than they really “ are. For you must know, that tho’ our Wri“ tings are very obscure, yet it is not however “ impossible, through the Assistance of God, with“ out which Men cannot do any thing, to reach “ their secret Meaning, and to come at the true “ Sense of all their Enigmas. It is this that I “ shall make you clearly apprehend, by giving “ you the Key of each different Style in which “ our Philosophers write. But in order to make “ this Matter the more easy, I will first discover “ without Disguise the fundamental Principle of “ our Philosophy.

“ When the Eternal Being, continued the Cab-“ balist, created the Universe, he divided the Wa“ ters from the Waters. He then separated the “ purer Part of these into three Portions. Of the “ first and most perfect Part, he made whatso“ ever exists above the Firmament; of the second “ the Firmament it self, the Planets, Stars, and “ all that is therein; of the third, he composed
 “ the four Elements, through which he diffused
 “ the Spirit of Life, which ought to be regarded “ as a fifth Element, the Principle, the Seed, the “ Ligament, the operating Virtue, by which the “ whole Universe is kept together. It is this “ fifth Element of which the Generality of Men “ are ignorant, that the true Philosophers call the “ Universal Spirit, Natural Magick, the Quintef- “ sence, the Elixir, Aurum potabile, the Stone, Mer- “ cury, Azoth, Water, Fire, Dew, &c. They “ make use of so many different Names, the better

 “ to cover their Secrets ; but however it is also “ true, that each of these different Denomina“ tions suits perfectly well the Thing intended “ thereby. When they call this the Quintessence, “ it is because it is the Result of the Assemblage
 “ of the Four Elements. When they ascribe to it
 “ the Name of the Elixir, it is on account of its “ admirable Properties in preserving Life, and “ freeing Men from all Diseases. The Title
 “ of Aurum potabile is given it, because it “ is excellent as Gold. It must also be observed,
 “ that these Philosophers do not contradict them“ selves in asserting that their Matter is vegetable, “ animal, and mineral. For as the universal “ Spirit or fifth Element could not subsist with“ out some sort of Body ; and as on the other “ hand, no Body can subsist without Life, it is “ diffused through all the different Elements ; so “ that the vegetable, the animal, the mineral “ Faculty, are each of them properly ascribed “ thereto. All the Secret of the Art then consists “ in this, the Capacity of finding the vital Spirit, “ and putting it into a Condition to act freely on “ any Body. For abounding in Heat, it clears, “ purifies, and in the end certainly performs the “ grand Operation.

“ The wise Philosophers who have written on “ the Method of extracting, or of drawing out
 “ of other Elements this prolifick and vivifying “ Seed, have employed different Methods of Ex“ plication, alike dark and obscure, and these are “ called the Styles. Merlin made use of the alle- “ gorick, King Arthur of the parabolick, the great

Hermes

“ Hermes of problematick, Arfileus of the typical, “ Balgus and the Cosmopolite of the Enigmatick.
 “ With respect to these different Methods, or, as “ we phrase it, the Interpretation of the Styles;
 “ the Key of the two first will suffice to render
 “ the Knowledge of the rest easy.

“ Merlin, speaking in the allegorick Style, pro- “ ceeds thus: A King having drank of the Water
 “ could not mount his Horse, i. e. by a proper Mixture
 “ of Water and Earth, the Matter is rendred fluid.
 “ He then proceeds; The King having taken a Me- “ dicine composed of Sal Armoniack and Nitre, was “ found dead. By which he would insinuate that “ by the Means of the specifick Projection, or of “ the Spirit extracted from the Elements, the li- “ quid Matter was fixed and converted into Gold,
 “ the Fire of the Furnace having consumed all the “ Humidity.

“ The Enigmatick Style, which is that made “ use of by Balgus and the Cosmopolite, is as ob“ scure as the allegorick for those who are un“ acquainted with this fifth Element; this Salt or
 “ this Spirit which I have told you is the true “ Powder of Projection. For instance; Look, say
 “ they, upon an Infant that sucks, and be not “ troubled, for there lies the Secret of the Art.
 “ These Words signify, That we must purify the “ active and the passive Matter, the Sulphur and
 “ the Mercury, by a Fire which must be managed “ with Care, and which we must augment in the “ same manner as we encrease the Portions of “ Aliment given to Children as they attain to riper “ Years.

“ You now see, continued the Cabbalist, that
 “ the Writings of the Sages are not absolutely un“ intelligible to such as are initiated in the My“ steries of which they treat, and that they have “ Reason to take the Precautions they do for the-“ better concealing their Secrets from the Pro-“ phane.”

I shall readily, returned I, admit of the Obscurity for which your Philosophers contend, because they say it is so necessary to them. But I have still a great Doubt upon me ; I can hardly bring myself to believe that any of them have carried Matters so far, as actually to extract this vivifying Salt from the other Elements. I think also that they have never made Gold, notwithstanding their boasting of that Art. You, for Example, who are one of their most famous Disciples, do you know the Secret of extracting this Spirit of Life ; this Powder of Projection, which is absolutely necessary to the Work of Transmutation ?

“ Such, replied the Cabbalist, as are acquaint“ ed with the Manner of working, are yet at a “ great distance from the Completion of the great “ Work. One finds not in a whole Age above
 “ one or two Persons fortunate enough to direct “ their Fire with that Justice as to arrive at the “ great End of the Art. The smallest Excess or “ Deficiency in Heat is sufficient to defeat the “ Labour of twenty or of thirty Years, and what “ Knowledge soever a Man has, it is God alone
 “ who can prevent certain Accidents which are “ too frequent for all human Precautions ; this “ is the Reason why among so many of the Sages,
 “ so few have fully succeeded *. I must even ac“ knowledge

* The Chymists compare the Difficulties attending the Search of the Philosopher's Stone to those encountred by Jason, in his looking for the Golden Fleece.
 They pretend that it is not till after a long and laboured Pursuit, that we arrive at length at the great, the important

“ knowledge to you, that tho’ I have revealed
 “ the most hidden Myſteries of the Art, I would “ by no means adviſe you to apply yourſelf to “ it; nay, if I had not long ago embraced, I “ ſhould not at this day have choſen it prefer“ rable to many other Occupations. I muſt tell “ you, that I have already conſumed very con“ ſiderable Sums, but tho’ I have not reached
 “ the Art of making Gold, I have diſcovered “ many other Secrets that have recompenſed my important Secret. As alſo that ſuch as are unable to bear Fatigue and Diſappointments, ought to forbear the Search of the Philoſophick Tranſmutation. This Caution is of mighty uſe in conducting to their utter Ruin ſuch as ſeek to make Gold. Atti ſunt paululum doctiores, humaniores, & ratione infantiunt, qui arbitrantur lapidem ita a Naturâ effectum, ut absque omni labore, & ſine præparatione, metallis violenter paucis Temporis minutis, alias & novas formas induere valeat. Hoc eſt, ſi quis lapidem habeat, ipſum poſſe ſtatim quævis metalla transformare: quæ tamen cerdonica indoctaque imperitiſſimi Vulgi opinio, re ipſa, falſa, vana & nullis fundamentis, repugnat evidentiffimis Philoſophorum Argumentis & Rationibus. Poetæ, Deorum Filii, exemplo Jaſonis docent, quanti ſit laboris ante quàm tantum rem liceat auferre. Oportet prudentiſſimis conſiliariis, ſive deliberationibus & conſiliis exquisitis rem aggredi, diu navigare, ac ubi tandem ex Mari perveneris in terram, materiam ſolidam, conſtantem & fixam, arte vera tanquam Medeâ, ſolis filii Terram aëripedibus Tauris adamanteo jugo junctis, qui flammas ex naribus ſpirant, arare, ac in eam Terram ex Galeâ Draconis dentes ſeminare ex quibus, Hoſtes natos miris armis inſtructos interficere, Lapide in medio projecto, de quo certabunt inter ſe, Draconi truculentiffimo inducere ſomnum, quibus cunctis ſummo labore & diligentia peractis, patet Aditus in Martis Templum ad aureum vellus. Epiſtola ad Fuggeros, p. 51, & 52.

“Pains, and encouraged me to pursue my Enter“prize.”

It would then, replied I, be in vain for me to persuade you to quit so deceitful a Study. I will not then offer to tell you what you must many Times in your cooler Moments have told yourself. But I shall at all times be grateful for your Complaisance towards me, and shall hear with Pleasure whatever you shall think fit further to communicate of your Secrets. With these Words I took Leave of the Chymist, who repeated to me his Promise of communicating whatsoever he found curious.

How great soever, my dear Isaac, the Folly may be of the Cabbalists, and Lovers of sublime Chemistry, it must however be acknowledged, that the World is much indebted to them for a Multitude of Discoveries in experimental Physicks. For in searching their fifth Element, and imaginary Powder of Projection, they have discovered the Methods by which vitriolick and metallick Fluids coagulate in the Entrails of the Earth, and form there Minerals, Metals, and Stones, according to the different Kinds of Matter on which they act. Chemistry has given us also a sensible Idea by its Fermentations and Sublimations of the Vegetation of Plants, and the Growth of Animals. From its Distillations we learn how the Sun after having rarified the Waters of the Sea, or of Rivers, draws them into the Air where they form Clouds, and again fall down in Rain or Dew. So many Discoveries for which we are indebted to the Studies of the Chemists, ought to endear to true Philosophers the vain Researches of the Cabbalists, and pretended Sages, of whose Extravagance and Folly, they make such wise and profitable Uses.

Fare-

Farewel, dear Isaac, live happy and content, and take Care not to embarrass your self by searching after the Philosopher's Stone.

London.

L E T T E R C L I I .

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THERE is no Nation, dear Isaac, exempt from some false Step or other ; the French blame the English for having unjustly burnt Joan of Arc, commonly called the Maid of Orleans, for no other Crime than that she had faithfully served her Prince and Country. They say, farther to palliate this Injustice done to the illustrious French Woman, they have had Recourse to Fraud and Falshood, and most ridiculously charged her with Conjuring and Witchcraft.

The English agree at this Day, that their Ancestors were in the wrong to act so contrary to the Laws of Equity and of War ; they assert that the Maid of Orleans, whom the French Historians, generally speaking, treat as a Saint, was in reality no more than a bold, enterprizing, high-spirited Woman, of whom the Courtiers of Charles VII. made use to re-establish the Affairs of the Kingdom, and to dispel that Panick with which the Soldiers had been seized.

This Diversity of Opinions in the French and English Historians, begat in me a Curiosity of going to the bottom of this History, and of bringing the Truth to Light, notwithstanding the Mists with which it is covered. Pasquier, an Author by no means to be suspected of favouring Superstition, hath given us an exact Detail of the Process against Joan de Arc, whom he looks upon as a Saint, and whose Memory he has warmly defended. If on examining the Proofs which he brings in order to demonstrate the pretended Revelation made to this Joan, their Falsity can be clearly made appear, one may safely affirm, that Heaven had nothing to do, strictly to say, with the Transactions of that Woman ; and one may allow, that the English at this Day are in the right in alledging she was an Instrument made use of by the Counsellors and Generals of Charles VII. Let me beseech you, my Friend, to reflect attentively on the Reasons alledged by Pasquier, as those which led him to believe the Maid of Orleans a Saint, and I persuade myself that you will quickly see through them.

*It is a great pity , says my Author, never did any Person succour France so opportunely, and so happily as this Maid, and never was the Memory of any Woman so torn, and dishonoured as hers has been. The English looked upon her as a Heretick and a Witch, in which Light they burnt her. Some of our Writers have suggested, that she was an artful Woman, such a one as Numa Pompilius passed upon the Romans for a Nymph, in order to render himself more respected by the People ; and this is the Opinion of Langy in the third Book and third Chapter of his Military Discipline. To this others have added, that the French Lords engaged this Wench to act as she did, and to feign that she was sent by God in order to succour the Kingdom ; they also affirm, that at Chinon, where she distinguished King Charles amidst the Croud that attended him, she was assisted by a certain Signal given her by her Confederates. Nay, some have been so base and impudent as to suggest that one Captain Baudricourt debauched her, and finding her to have a very sharp Wit, put her upon this Action.

* Recherches de Pasquier, lib vi. chap. 5.

You must observe, Isaac, that even in the time this Transaction happened, the Truth of her Divine Mission was very much doubted, and that this Opinion spread and prevailed by degrees. In the Age wherein Pasquier wrote, most People gave no sort of Credit to the Holiness of Joan de Arc, or to her Wisdom; but on the contrary, were persuaded that all her Pretences to Inspiration were founded in the Secrets revealed to her by Baudricourt.

As to the Manners of this young Woman, I readily agree with Pasquier, that they were above Reproach. The Proof he has given us, hath the Appearance of Truth. Her Chastity she maintained, said he, to her Death, even in the midst of the Troops. It is certain that the English, who sought by a thousand Methods to defame her, in order to cover that Severity with which they proceeded against her, would not have failed to mention her Incontinence, if any Testimony thereof had been in their power, and yet there is nothing of this sort in her Process. But what of all this? It may prove the Chastity indeed, but it cannot prove the Sanctity of Joan de Arc. In admitting that Baudricourt did not debauch her, it no way follows that she had a divine Revelation; I do not think that being a Maid, includes the Character of a Prophetess and Deliverer of Nations. I shall agree with the French Historians that Joan of Arc never had a Bastard, but then I concur with the English Authors in asserting that her pretended Mission was a downright Imposture. In order to be convinc'd of this, we need only hear what Pasquier says, who would fain have her canoniz'd. I shall, says he, run over the principal Articles on which Joan of Arc was interrogated. Being asked as to her Name, she said, that in her own Country she was called Jeannette, but since she liv'd in France she hath been called Joan of Arc, of the Village of Dompnez; that her Father's Name is James Arc, and her Mother's Isabella; that the Name of one of her Godfathers is John Lingue, and of the other, John Berry; that one of her Godmother's Names was Jane, the Name of another Agnes, and of another Sibill, and that she had heard her Mother say she had some others; that at this time she was about twenty-nine Years of Age, that she was, by Profession a Sempstrefs, and not a Shepherdess; that she went once a Year to Confession, and she had frequently heard a Voice from Heaven, that it was remarkably clear and strong, and that she took it for the Voice of an Angel, that it admonished her to go into France, where she should raise the Siege of Orleans, and that if she went to Captain Robert de Baudricourt, he would grant her an Escort to conduct her thither, which accordingly he did.

I fancy, dear Isaac, that if I had not admitted the Virginity of our Heroine, I might have compared her Story to the Tale of Brother Lucius, which the ingenious Lá Fontaine hath put into Verse. Do not you think that Captain Baudricourt acted a little like the Hermit in that Story, who in a Voice like 'Thunder cry'd out, Good Woman, carry your Daughter to the Servant of God, for between him and her there shall come a Child who will one day become a great Pope. I know very well that Baudricourt acted in this Case from another Motive distinct from Brother Lucius; it was Policy, and not Love, that played off this Scene. Taken in this Light, the Maid herself might have been deceived into the Part she acted, but her subsequent Conduct shews that she was very well acquainted with the Design she was to serve, and knew perfectly well how to play her Game. She was extremely desirous of passing for a Saint and a Heroine, and without all doubt, she acted her Part beyond Comparison.

I must tell you, my Friend, a pleasant Notion that is just struck into my Head. I think I discover a strong Resemblance between Joan of Arc and La Cadière; the one had in view the Defeat of the English, and the other of the Jesuits; both intended to cheat the Public and to pass for Saints, each of them pretended to a perfect Acquaintance with Heaven and with the Blessed. As for our Maid, she pretended to have Revelations from the Deity. For Instance, it is said in her Process, She asserts that she knows God, loves the Duke of Orleans, and that she had had more Revelations in respect to him, than to any other Man living, except the Person whom she calls her King. *

You see, dear Isaac, that the Supreme Being communicated his Secrets to this Saint, as she said. We shall next see what care was taken to provide faithful Messengers; it was she herself informed her Judges of this Particular.

Being interrogated whether she had heard a Voice, she answered, Yesterday I heard it three times; first in the Morning, then about the Time of Vespers, and the third time in the Night. Being asked if she had ever seen any Fairies, she answered no; but that a Godmother of hers had boasted of seeing them at the Fairies Tree, in a little Copse not far from their Village of Dompne.

Being asked who they were that spoke to her, she answered St. Catherine and St. Margaret, whom she had often seen and touched, even since her being in Prison, and kissed the Ground whereon they trod; that she asked them their Advice on each Examination, and that she had assumed the Habit of a Man at their express Command.

* Item dixit, quod benè scit, quod Deus diligit Ducem Aurelianensem; ac etiam plures Revelationes de ipso habuerat, quàm de alio homine vivente, excepto illo quem dixit Regem suum.

Was I in the wrong to say that there was great Care taken as to the Messengers who visited this Maid of ours? Methinks Catherine and Margaret were Persons of some Distinction. A Circumstance of this nature would furnish a Monkish Writer with abundance of fine Reflections if the Life of our Saint was his Theme; he would doubtless observe the great Wisdom in sending She and not He-Saints to converse with this holy Maid, since she would certainly have been afraid to have staid long alone with a Man, or even with the Appearance of a Man, especially if the Saint had been of the Order of Cordeliers and wore the Habit: for you are to remark, that these celestial Visitors came first to Joan of Arc at a time of Life when she might have been very easily frightened; for in one of her Answers she says, that at the Tree of the Fairies, and at a Fountain near to Dompne, she had spoke with St. Catharine and St. Margaret, but not to the Fairies, and that her first Conversation with them was when she was thirteen Years old.

Is it lawful, my Friend, for an Author who has otherwise a great deal of Merit, to attempt to prove the Inspiration of the Maid of Orleans, by Stories so visibly fabulous as these are? Whenever these Answers are mentioned to a Philosopher who makes use of his Reason, he will not hesitate a Moment, let his Religion be what it will, in asserting that the whole was a Scheme of Policy. Ought we to be astonished at the odd Things we meet with in Greek and Roman Writers, when we see French Historians in great Esteem boldly tell so puerile a Fable as this, and so contrary to common Sense? How shall a Christian, who pretends to swallow this Tale, give his Reasons

Reasons for rejecting the Stories with which the Writings of an Herodotus are sprinkled.

To be thoroughly convinced of the Absurdity of this pious Fraud, we need only consider a little the Conduct of this Woman while she was in Prison. Being solicited by her Judges to put on again the Habit of a Woman, she said, she desired never to use any female Garment, except a Shift might be put upon her dead Body: And being afterwards told that she should be admitted to the Communion if she would lay aside Men's Clothes, she took it into her head to prefer her Breeches to all Things, and to chuse rather to live as an excommunicated Person than to put on a Petticoat. At last however she submitted to go to Mass in a Gown, but upon this express Condition, that she might again put on Men's Clothes when she came from Chapel. Was not this a whimsical Fancy? *

What is still more extraordinary, it was in compliance to the Orders of St. Catherine and St. Margaret that she was so much attached to her Breeches; it is true she suffered dearly for following their Advice. The Prosecutor having finished his Evidence, says Pasquier, Sentence was pronounced by the Bishop. He said, that all that had been done by this Woman was to be accounted Fiction and Delusion, in order to seduce the poor People, or else the Invention of the Devil; and that in acting in this manner she had blasphemed against the Honour of God, acted undutifully towards her Parents, besides shewing herself a very impious Person in declining the holy Communion rather than part with the Habit of the other Sex. There concurred in this Judgment the Bishops of Constance and Lisieux, the Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Roan, Sixteen

* We are told this in Latin, every way worthy of the times wherein the Maid of Orleans suffered as a Witch. Noluit huic præcepto obsequi: in quo apparet Pervicacia ejus, et Obduratio ad Malum, et contemptus Sacramentorum.

Doctors,

Doctors, Six Licentiates and Batchelors of Divinity, and eleven Advocates of Roan; this Sentence was transmitted to the University of Paris in order to have their Opinion thereupon: The University declared that the Maid was truly a Heretick and a Schismatick, and directed two Letters, one to the King, the other to the Bishop of Beauvais, desiring she might be put to death.

Notwithstanding the Decision of the University, the English were for saving her Life, provided always she would consent to quit those cursed Breeches, of which she had been hitherto so very fond. The holy Warriour finding at last that die she must, or put on a Petticoat, she wisely resolved to make choice of the latter, and this without waiting for the Advice of St. Margaret. They exposed her on a publick Scaffold, says Pasquier, where, after she had been admonished, she declared aloud that she submitted to the Judgment of God and of our Holy Father the Pope. Then perceiving that they expected still more from her, she professed her unfeigned Belief of all that the Church taught; and said farther, that since many wise and discreet People were of Opinion that the Appearances she had seen were not from God, she was content to believe so, and to make a publick Abjuration, which is inserted at full length in her Process. Upon this followed another Sentence, whereby she is absolved from her Excommunication and condemned to perpetual Imprisonment. After this, she resumed the Habit of her Sex, and was accordingly conducted back to Prison.

See, my Friend, the Maid's Affairs now in a pretty tolerable Condition, and her Life secured at the Expence of her Breeches. But the mischief was, that she had put on her Coats without consulting St. Catharine, who was extremely vext to find her in Woman's Garb; when she came next to make her a visit, she reprimanded her severely. Who, said she, put you upon changing your Garb?
resume,

resume, at all Events, that which I recommended, and let me see you do it this Minute. Joan of Arc obeyed, and very unluckily for her, as the Sequel of her Story, given us by Pasquier, will shew.

They had however left her Men's Clothes by her, in order to see what she would do. No sooner was she alone, than, upon second Thoughts, she repented of her Abjuration, and put on again the Clothes she had thrown aside. This Abjuration, dear Isaac, in my Opinion, resembles strongly that Recantation which La Cadiere made of the Crimes by her charg'd upon Father Girard; she too, quickly resum'd her former Sentiments. Joan of Arc did the same thing. The one was school'd by the Jansenists, the other by St. Catharine; but Joan paid for it very dearly. Early the next Morning she was visited, and being found in her old Habit, was asked how she came to make this Change; she said, she did it at the Command of the Saints, and that she was willing rather to obey God than Men. On these Words she was declared a Heretic relapsed, and in consequence thereof delivered over to the secular Arm and condemned to be burnt alive.—The University of Paris also, willing to play its part, ordered a Procession on the Feast of St. Martin, whereat a Dominican Fryar made a solemn Declamation against this poor Wench, in order to shew that whatever she had done was by the assistance of the Devil and not of God.

You see what a Noise and Disturbance a Petticoat and a Pair of Breeches occasioned, and what a struggle there was which of the two this masculine Maid should wear. Surely this appears very ridiculous, and yet if we go to the Bottom of Things we must acknowledge that the Dress of this Wench was a Point of State, and a proper Subject of refined Politicks. Those of the French Nation required that

Joan

Joan should not quit her Breeches, and on the other hand, it was requisite for the English that she shou'd appear in Petticoats. The Reason you'll easily perceive to be very well founded. The astonishing Impression which the Sanctity of Joan of Arc had made on the other Minds of the Soldiers of Charles VII. had totally ruined the English Affairs in France. In order therefore to restore them, and to destroy a Notion which was so advantagious to their Enemies, it became necessary for them to make the Maid disavow all her pretended Revelations. The Moment she laid aside her Breeches their Point was gained. On the other hand, Joan of Arc knew perfectly well of how great Use her Imposture was, and of what mighty Consequence her interesting the Saints in the Affair. This made her remain firm till the Fear of an approaching Death got the better of her Dissimulation. But being terrified with the fear of Punishment, she consented at length to own the Falshood of the Tale she had told. When she had once taken this step, the English ought to have rested there, as having effectually destroyed her Credit. But it seems they were not of this Opinion, they laid therefore a Snare for her utter Destruction, by leaving her Breeches in the way. They might as well have shut up an hungry Dog in a Chamber full of Provisions, and charg'd him not to eat. The Maid being recovered from her first Fright, saw the Consequence of the false step she had made, and had a mind to repair it. She flattered herself that the English durst not put her to death; but she mistook their Tempers.

After all, dear Isaac, tho' I deny the Holiness of Joan of Arc, I am far from detracting from the just Praises she deserved. She was certainly a Heroine, and delivered her Country. The Cruelty of the English towards her, is a Stain upon them as a Nation, Nation. They ought to have look'd upon their Prisoner with the Respect due to a Person faithful to her King and Country, and who serv'd them as far as her Wit and Courage would carry her. If the English had at present such another Woman in their Hands, they would admire her Valour and venerate her Person, as much as they would condemn her Pretences to Saintship.

Adieu, dear Isaac, live content and happy, and let me have the Satisfaction of hearing from you.

London.

L E T T E R CLIII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

AS much as I am prejudiced in favour of Mr. Locke's Sentiments, I can scarce grant him that the Soul sometimes ceases totally to think, that is, while we are asleep.

I do admit that I am not thoroughly satisfied that this Opinion is absolutely false, but I look upon it as doubtful, and therefore I should have been glad he laid down his Notion as probable only, and not as certain. This sage Philosopher seems to me too much persuaded that the Cartesians are mistaken in their Definition of the Essence of the Soul, when they assure us that it consists in actual Thought. We know, says he, certainly, by Experience, that sometimes We think, and hence we deduce this infallible Conclusion, that we have in us something which both

*hath a Power of thinking : But to know whether this Substance thinks continually or not, is what we cannot be assured of, farther than Experience informs us. For to say that actual Thinking is an essential Property of the Soul, is visibly to beg the Question, without any kind of Proof. **

I am of Opinion, my Friend, that Locke had no just Reason for this Reproach on the Cartesians, because there are several strong Reasons which seem to authorize this Definition, that the Essence of the Soul consists in the actual Faculty of thinking. “ The Soul, say the Philosophers, hath neither “ Magnitude, Extent, nor Depth. Thus then,
“ none of those Attributes which belong to Matter “ can be assigned thereto. We know then but one “ of its Qualities, viz. that of thinking. Have “ we not Reason then to alledge that it cannot sub“ sist without this, and that it is its Essence, because “ it is the only Quality which we have discovered.
“ For, as we are acquainted with the Existence of “ Matter, only by the means of its Extension, so “ all the Knowledge we have of Souls is by “ Thought. In as much as we hesitate not to de“ fine the Essence of Matter by Extension, on “ account of our knowing no material Substance
“ but what is extended, why should we not define “ the Essence of the Soul by the actual Exercise of “ Thought, since we cannot perceive a spiritual “ Substance but what has this Faculty of thinking ?”

Tho’ it may be possible to answer these Objections, or at least to shew that they are not convincing, it must however be acknowledged that they ought to be thoroughly examined, and that they very well deserve our Attention : The Cartesians are far from asserting that the Soul always thinks, without Proofs. Locke therefore had no Right to reproach these Philosophers for advancing, without Evidence and against Reason, a Question with respect to Fact, and that there was nothing but might be proved, according to their Method. “ I need only suppose, said “ he, that all Watches think while the Balance is “ in motion, and I shall have thereby sufficiently “ prov’d that my Watch thought all last Night long.” But the Cartesians might say, You have no Right to say that your Watch thinks while the Balance moves, because you have not only no probable Reason to assert that the Motion of a Balance hath any thing to do with Thought, but you are, on the other hand, fully assured that in as much as it is a material Substance, it has no other Qualities than those of Extent, Quantity and Thickness. But with respect to us, the Case is very different. We say that the Soul thinks as well when we are asleep as when we are awake, because we were sure that the Faculty of thinking belongs thereto, not only when the Body is awake, but asleep, of which the Remembrance of our Dreams is a certain and evident Proof. We therefore have some foundation to conclude, that it may do continually what it does for some Moments; whereas your Supposition of the Balance and the Watch is absurd and ridiculous.

* Locke’s Essay on Human Understanding. Book II. Chap. i. §. 10. All the Quotations are in this Chapter.

I will continue, dear Isaac, my Examination of Locke’s Sentiments, and I beseech you to give me your Opinion of the Difficulties which appear in them to me. “ The first time we fall fast asleep, “ says that Philosopher, I apprehend we shall be “ sufficiently satisfied that there is nothing in their “ Doctrine, who teach that the Soul always thinks. “ At least those who have slept without dreaming “ can never be convinced that their Thoughts were “ in Action, during the space of four Hours, while “ they knew nothing of the matter; and if they “ are

“ are taken in the very Act, waked in the middle “ of that sleeping Contemplation, can give no “ manner of Account of it. It will perhaps be said, “ that the Soul thinks, even in the soundest Sleep,
 “ but the Memory retains it not ; That the Soul
 “ in this sleeping Man, should be this Moment “ busy a thinking, and the next Moment in a “ waking Man, not remember, or be able to re“ collect one Jot of all those Thoughts, is very “ hard to be conceived, and would need some bet“ ter Proof than bare Assertion to make it be be“ lieved.”

The Cartesians might reply to these Objections, that far from resting their Notions on the Assurance they give us of their Justice and Truth, they rely on daily Experience for the Proof of their Opinions. For in fact, does it not seem an odd thing to be amazed that a Man, waking on a sudden, should lose in an Instant, the Thoughts which occupied him while he slept ; whereas we daily see Men in their full Senses and broad awake, forgetting one Minute what they thought on a Minute before, and striving, to no purpose, to recover their first Thought ? There is not a Man in the World to whom these Slips do not sometimes happen, and there is nothing more common than to hear a Man say, I had this Minute something to tell you, it has escaped me, I have done all I can to recollect it, but I find it is absolutely in vain. I would ask, my dear Isaac, if the Soul, forgetting totally certain Thoughts which occupied it a Moment before, while the Body it occupies is wide awake, we ought to think it extraordinary that it loses the Remembrance of those Thoughts which employed it while the Body was asleep, of which consequently it could have but light Impressions, its Organs being, in a manner, stopt up and able to serve it but faintly. Shall we we say that it is not impossible that the Soul may rest for a Moment, that is, cease from thinking, even when a Man is awake; and that his forgetting its Perceptions is owing to this short and imperceptible Cessation of Thought? This would be an Absurdity so great and so evident, that Experience alone would sufficiently detect it. The sage Locke was too quick-sighted to adopt such an Opinion. He says on the contrary, that it is admitted the Soul never ceases to think while a Man is awake, because this is precisely what, in this respect, constitutes his Condition. Who then can shew us a Reason for a Man's forgetting his own Thoughts while he is awake? Let us, I say, see him who will answer this Question, and he will have a Right to oblige the Cartesians in their turn, to explain how a Man may think all Night without knowing, the next Morning, any thing of the Ideas which occupied his Mind for so many Hours.

The Difficulty which Locke proposes, as to the Inutility of the Soul's thinking during the Time of Sleep, does not appear to me very considerable. "To think often, says he, and never to retain it, so much as one Moment, is a very useless sort of thinking, and the Soul in such a State of thinking does very little, if at all, excel that of a Looking-Glass, which constantly receives Variety of Images or Ideas, but retains none; they disappear and vanish, and there appears no Footsteps of them; the Looking-Glass is never the better for such Ideas, nor the Soul for such Thoughts. — If the Soul retains no Memory of its own Thoughts, if it cannot lay them up for its Use, and be able to recall them upon occasion, if it cannot reflect upon what is past and make use of its former Experiences, Reasonings and Contemplations, to what Purpose does it think? They who make
the

“ the Soul a thinking Thing, at this rate will not “ make it a more noble Being than those do whom “ they condemn for allowing it to be nothing but “ the subtlest parts of Matter.—Nature never “ makes excellent Things for mean or no Uses; and “ it is hardly to be conceived, that our infinitely wise “ Creator should make so admirable a Faculty as
 “ the Power of Thinking, to be so idly employed,
 “ at least a quarter Part of its time, as to think “ constantly without remembring any of its “ Parts.”

This Passage, my dear Isaac, contains two Objections. The first respects the Inutility of Thoughts to a Man asleep. But to this the Cartesians may well reply to Locke, that those Thoughts which he looks upon as superfluous may be very necessary, tho’ we are not acquainted with their Use: Because ’tis too hasty a Conclusion that in consequence of our not knowing what Use a Thing is for, therefore it ought not to be. The Weakness of human Understanding hinders it from penetrating the Use of a multitude of Beings, which exist notwithstanding, nor have we any Right to deny their Existence. Besides, Experience inclines us to believe that Men really reap Profit from the Thoughts which their Souls have in Sleep, tho’ they are not communicated to the Body. The Translator of Locke remarks very justly, that the Inutility of these Kind of Thoughts is not so certain as our Author imagines. A Child, says he, is obliged to get by heart a dozen or fifteen Verses out of Virgil; He reads him three or four Times just before his going to sleep, and repeats them as soon as he awakes in the Morning, perfectly well. Does his Soul think of these Verses while he is buried in a profound Sleep? The Child knows nothing of the matter. However, if the Soul actually ruminated on the Verses, as I think I may suspect, with some Appearance

*Appearance of Reason, then here are certain Thoughts not altogether useless for Man, tho' he has no sort of Remembrance that his Soul was employed about them so much as one Moment. **

The second Objection of Locke falls of itself. For when we have destroyed the first, and have proved that the Thoughts of a Man asleep may be useful to him tho' he cannot remember that he thought, it can no longer be said that Nature does nothing in vain, and that God, acting always with infinite Wisdom, bestows not superfluous Faculties on any Being. In order to have made his Reasons clear and conclusive, it ought to have been evidently and unanswerably proved that the Thoughts of a Man asleep are absolutely useless, and even after that there would remain a Difficulty to be resolved. Of what Use, might one say to Mr. Locke, are Dreams? Are they very useful or necessary to Men, or do they draw any great Advantage from the dark Remembrance of certain whimsical Ideas presented to their Imaginations? Here are Thoughts that are little better than useless, and yet occupy the human Soul while the Body is asleep. God therefore may have afforded Man a Faculty of forming other Thoughts, of which he entirely loses all Remembrance.

Fare thee well, dear Isaac, live content and happy.

London.

* Remarque a la Page 73. de la 2d Edition. i. e. of P. Coste's Translation of Locke's Essay on Human Understanding.

L E T T E R CLIV.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraites, formerly a Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
CECA.

I Have examined, with all imaginable Attention, the Letter you wrote me concerning the Difficulties you find in that Opinion, which will not admit actual Thinking to be the Effence of the Soul. After comparing your Objections with what Locke hath written on the Subject, I am thoroughly persuaded that it was on a good Foundation this sage Philosopher maintained that there is an Appearance of the Soul's resting, during considerable Intervals, without thinking.

The Comparison you make between Extension as the Effence of Matter, and the actual Exercise of Thought, as the Effence of the Soul, doth not appear to me either just or conclusive. I could farther deny that Extension is the Effence of Matter, and could alledge that you are so far from knowing what constitutes a Spiritual Substance, that you are ignorant even of the first Principles of material Things. Descartes, says a modern Philosopher, * makes the Effence of a Body consist in Extension, and concludes that there is Extension wherever there is Matter.—

* Philosophie du Bon Sens, ou Reflexions Philosophiques a l'Usage des Cavaliers et du Beau Sexe. pag. 278. That is, The Philosophy of Good Sense, or Philosophical Reflections for the Use of Gentlemen and Ladies. By the Marquiss D'Argens, the Author of this Book.

I ask then what Reason there is that Extension should constitute the Nature and Essence of a Body rather than Solidity, or any other essential Quality of Matter. For by this Attention to a single Attribute abstracted from all the rest, we are given to understand that the other Qualities may subsist without it, which is contrary however to their Nature. I may single out any particular Attribute, stop there, and suppose it to constitute the Essence of Body. If I hold in my Hand a Sphere, I may, by Abstraction, suppose that all its Weight is in its Centre, and attend only to this Idea of its Centre. It would however be absurd for me to conclude that the Nature and Essence of Body consists in Gravity only. Besides, We do not know all that is in this Body, at least, we cannot demonstrate these Notions of ours. Therefore we do not certainly know how it is constituted; and tho' we perceive not above seven or eight Attributes, yet can we not assure ourselves that it hath none others, without which its Existence would be as impossible as without those seven or eight which are known to us. If the Nature of a Thing consists of thirty Attributes necessary and inseparable, and ten of these should be taken away, it would be ridiculous in us to suppose we still had that thing which absolutely required thirty. On the contrary, we have another Thing which absolutely requires a lesser number of Attributes to form its Existence. It is the samething with respect to Body; of which, as we cannot demonstrate that we know all its Attributes, it is also impossible that we should precisely know what constitutes its Essence.

You see then, Monceca, that there are very strong Reasons against the pretended Certainty of the Cartesians, with respect to the Essence of Matter. Now if it be true that Men are uncertain as to the Nature of Bodies, why should they flatter themselves that they have clear and distinct Notions of the Nature of the Soul? Might not Locke very well say to the Cartesians, Before you persuade yourselves that you ought to define the Essence of Matter by Extension, and that of the Soul by actual Thought, because you cannot imagine any corporeal thing without Extension, or any spiritual Being without the Faculty of Thinking; stay till you are clearly informed as to all the different Attributes which are absolutely necessary to these different Substances, that you may not allow a single Attribute to be the Essence of a thing, which it may be requires thirty, of which you are ignorant, and yet nevertheless, they are absolutely necessary as to its Existence. You believe, or at least you would persuade others that you believe that you are certain, in the Notions you have of the Essence of spiritual and material Beings; yet one may very reasonably say that you are so far from knowing the Nature of these Substances, that you are absolutely ignorant wherein consists the Difference between them.

I don't know, my Friend, whether ever you have taken notice of what Locke wisely objects to the Cartesians, on the Subject of Man's Ignorance as to the Essence of the human Soul. — “ We have,
 “ says he, the Ideas of Matter and Thinking, but “ possibly shall never be able to know whether any “ meer material Being thinks or no, it being im“ possible for us, by the Contemplation of our own “ Ideas, without Revelation, to discover whether “ Omnipotency has not given to some Systems of “ Matter fitly disposed, a Power to perceive and “ think; or else joined and fixed to Matter so dis“ posed a thinking immaterial Substance; it being “ in respect of our Notions, not much more re“ mote from our Comprehension to conceive that “ God can, if he pleases, superadd to Matter a “ Faculty of thinking, than that he should super-“ add to it another Substance with a Faculty of “ thinking—For since we must allow God has annexed

“ annexed Effects to Motion, which we can no “ way conceive Motion able to produce, what “ Reason have we to conclude that he [could not “ order them, as well to be produced in a Subject
 “ we cannot conceive capable of them, as well as “ in a Subject we cannot conceive the Motion of “ Matter can any way operate upon ?”

Before it is defined that the Soul always thinks, and that it is contrary to its Essence to remain sometimes altogether unactive while the Body sleeps, the Cartesians ought to shew us, not only full Answers to Locke's Objections, but also that we are under no kind of Uncertainty as to the Nature of the Soul. If they cannot demonstratively prove that it is not material, which they cannot do, because they are ignorant of its Nature, what do they mean by defining its Essence, and founding all their Reasonings upon that rash Definition? Dr. Stillingfleet would have persuaded Locke, that the Necessity of the Soul's being spiritual might be demonstrated, and that the giving to a Matter a Power of thinking was impossible, even to God. To the old Reasons of the Cartesians, he added some new ones. You may find a clear detail of this whole Dispute in the Notes to the Essay on Human Understanding. The English Philosopher says to his Adversary,
 “ Our Idea of Matter in general being a solid Sub“ stance, and our Idea of Body a solid, extended, “ figured Substance; you pretend, if I admit Mat“ ter to be capable of thinking, I confound the “ Idea of Matter with the Idea of a Spirit; to “ which I answer, No, no more than I confound
 “ the Idea of Matter with the Idea of a Horse,
 “ when I say, that Matter in general is a solid “ extended Substance, and that a Horse is a mate“ rial Animal, or an extended solid Substance
 “ with Sense and spontaneous Motion. The Idea

“ of Matter is an extended solid Substance; where-“ ever there is such a Substance there is Matter,
 “ and the Essence of Matter, whatever other Qua“ lities, not contained in that Substance, it shall “ please God to superadd to it. For Example, “ God creates an extended solid Substance, with“ out the superadding any thing else to it; and so “ we may consider it at rest: to some Parts of it
 “ he superadds Motion, but it has still the Essence “ of Matter; other Parts of it, he frames into “ Plants, with all the Excellencies of Vegetation, “ Life, and Beauty which is to be found in a “ Rose, or a Peach-Tree, above the Essence of “ Matter in general; but it is still Matter: to other “ Parts, he adds Sense and spontaneous Motion,
 “ and those other Properties that are to be found
 “ in an Elephant. All this is allow’d; but if one “ ventures to go a step farther, and say, God may “ give to Matter Thought, Reason, and the Power “ of Willing, as well as Sense and spontaneous “ Motion, there are Men ready presently to limit
 “ the Power of the omnipotent Creator *.” To these Objections, dear Monceca, Dr. Stillingfleet could oppose nothing that was reasonable. He had recourse to general Terms, which had been over and over examined, and invincibly refuted. Let us acknowledge then frankly, that we know nothing of the Soul. We know that in Men awake it always thinks, but whether it hath any Perceptions while we are asleep, is a thing we never can be clear in.

As to what you say of the sudden Loss of Thought which Men daily perceive when they are awake, it can, by no means, be compared with those into which the Soul falls, in case it were certain it

* Locke's Essay on Human Understanding, Book iv.
chap. iii.

thought while we slept. For a Man awake, who forgets something which was in his head a Moment before, remembers he thought, though he cannot recollect of what, because his Mind is distracted by other Ideas; he retains, however, a certain Conviction and perfect Remembrance that he had some Perceptions, whereas a Man who has slept all Night, wakes the next Morning without knowing that his Mind perceived any Idea whatsoever. One ought to regard such slips in a Man, who is awake, as the consequence of a continual Circulation of Ideas. It is not reasonable therefore, to explain after this manner, that Ignorance in which the Soul appears to be on the waking of the Body, as to all the fine Thoughts, with which he is supposed to have been occupied. Had not then Locke reason to say, Wake a Man out of a deep Sleep, and ask him what he was thinking of. If he knew not that he had been thinking, he must be a very extraordinary Person to assert that he never ceased to think. Might not one with more reason affirm that he had not slept? This is beyond all doubt, a Matter out of the reach of Philosophy; and there is nothing but an express Revelation could discover to another that certain Thoughts passed in my Soul, though I did not discover them my self. These People must certainly have very piercing Eyes to discern certainly that I think, while I my self cannot perceive it, and expressly declare as much. What is still more remarkable, these same Eyes, which see more in me than I see in my self, can also perceive that Dogs and Elephants do not think, though these Animals give us all imaginable Demonstrations of their thinking except telling us as much.

As to Dreams, dear Monceca, which you fancy favour your Sentiment, take care that it does not overturn it, for it seems that they are evident Proofs that when the Soul does think in our Sleep we are sensible of it; and that it cannot think at all, but the whole human Machine must be sensible thereof. I agree with you as to the Inutility of Dreams, but then they are occasion'd by second Causes: They are occasion'd by certain Motions in the Brain during our Sleep. Their Inutility therefore cannot excuse that of the pretended Power of Thinking in the Soul, which it must derive immediately from God, since it cannot be produced by any Passions of the Body, otherwise it would have knowledge of them, as this Sensibility in Dreams clearly proves. Locke then had reason to say that Nature makes nothing in vain, and that it is by no means likely that the Soul should have a faculty of employing itself about useless Thoughts while the Body is asleep. Read over again with attention, dear Monceca, all that Locke has said in support of his Sentiment; and I am persuaded you will never more accuse him of being too decisive.

Adieu my Friend, live content and happy.

Cairo.

L E T T E R C L V .

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, heretofore a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE English, dear Isaac, are very nice Observers of their Laws, they follow the Text strictly without seeking Explications which may elude them, or under pretence of entring into the Idea.

Idea of the Legislator, converting the Study of their Laws into an arbitrary Science. The Courts, wherein Justice is distributed, are never in the least doubt, whether such a Crime is to be punished in such a manner. It is the Care of the Judges only to discover whether the Party accused be really guilty. This once decided, the Law speaks the Penalty of its Transgression. In England the Judge only reports the Process; the Law itself is, properly speaking, the Judge.

One cannot, my Friend, sufficiently approve a Practice so prudent and so judicious. Whatever Probity Men may be endow'd with, who are placed in the Seats of Justice, it is expedient to limit their Decisions, and not to leave it in their Breasts to punish or to leave unpunished, as they think fit, those who come before them. The Heart of Man is the Seat of so many Passions, and his Understanding is so often the Dupe of his Prejudices, that it is next to an impossibility he should not err whenever he acts without restraint. If Judges did not need direction, written Laws had never been compiled; but all things had been left to the Understandings of the Judges. But it was justly apprehended, that Judges might act like Men, even in discharge of their Offices, and see things through such Mists of Passion as might change their Form and Figure, or disguise them at least.

I am very sensible, my Friend, that a rigid Observance of Laws may sometimes create mischiefs: for which there can be no Remedies. I know too, that there are Cases wherein it might be justly wish'd that we might interpret the Will of the Legislator, so as to give it a more or less extended Sense. But I know too, that if such a Liberty as this might be in some cases useful to private Persons, it would not however fail to become dangerous, and even fatal to the Publick. It would accustom the Judges to arbitrary Decisions, and open a gate to a thousand Inconveniences, which would not fail to enter. But when a general Rule is establish'd, we seek not the Good of two or three Persons, but of the far greater Part of the Society*. Seneca, speaking of the Roman Laws about insolvent Debtors, which made no distinction between such as grew insolvent through inevitable Accidents, and those, who by Gaming and Debauchery, drew their Punishments justly upon them; observes roundly, that it is better a few should run the risque of losing the benefit of a just Excuse, rather than room be left for all the world to avoid paying, or suffering for nonpayment by setting up specious Pretences†.

It is sufficient, dear Isaac, to compel our Approbation of this wise Custom, to submit entirely and without reserve to the Laws, that Reason and Experience shew this Custom is more beneficial to the Publick than that which leaves an arbitrary Authority to the Judges. For as nobody pretends to doubt, that Men in general need some support to prevent their giving way to their Passions, so, as Judges are not Angels, they want Supports as well as other Men: and this they may find by a steady

* Nulla Lex satis commoda omnibus est: id modo quaeritur si majori Parti & in summam prodest. Tit. Livius, lib. xxxiv. cap. 3. num. 1.

† Quid tu tam imprudentes judicas. Majores nostros fuisse, ut non intelligerent, iniquissimum esse eodem loco haberi eum qui Pecuniam, quam à Creditore acceperat, Libidine aut Aleâ absumpsit, & eum qui Incendio, aut Latrocinio, aut aliquo Casu tristiore, aliena cum suis perdidit? Nullam Excusationem receperunt, ut Homines scirent Fidem utique præstandam. Satius enim erat à paucis etiam justam Excusationem non accipi, quam ab omnibus aliquam tentari. Seneca de Beneficiis, Lib. vii. cap. xvi.

adherence

adherence to the Laws, which will alike prevent their Hearts from being seduced, or their Understandings imposed on.

From this necessity of yielding a precise Obedience to the Will of the Legislators, there flows a need of having no Laws in force, but what are strictly equitable and just. Whenever, through a change of Times and Circumstances, Laws, which were once wise and salutary, become of another Nature, there is a necessity of rescinding and making them void. There cannot be a more dangerous Error for a State, or one more capable of disturbing the publick Tranquillity, than the Respect which some Nations affect to pay to certain whimsical and ridiculous Laws, and the Memories of those who made them. One would imagine, that they were not Men but Deities who instituted these perpetuated Customs; and that being reveal'd to them, who yield to them, as the Contents of our sacred Scriptures were to us, they stood in awe of their Indignation who gave them, in case they broke through them. Unhappy Consequences of Prejudices embraced in our Infancy, whereby a whole Society is sacrificed to an Impertinence inserted in the written Law, or ingrafted into a Body of old Customs!

We should have much less respect for Legislators if we reflected that there is scarce one of them, even amongst the most knowing or illustrious, who has not introduced something extravagant or ridiculous, or contrary to the Rules of strict Morality and Humanity at least. Lycurgus ordain'd, by the Laws he gave to Sparta, that young Women should wrestle stark-naked before Men, and that they should dance before them in the same manner, and sing certain Songs. This Legislator, in the Institution of this extravagant Custom, had in view, the giving strength to the young Women's Bodies that they might bring forth strong healthy Children, and feel less Inconveniency in Child-bearing. Such a method of rendring Women robust was not to be practised, without bidding adieu to all Sense of Shame or Decency? or must not a Man have banish'd from his Thoughts all the Rules of good Manners and of natural Modesty, before he could think of introducing a Custom so inevitably destructive of them? The Pagans themselves in the midst of the Impieties and Darkness of their Religion, could not avoid discovering how contrary this infamous Law was to good Manners. In the Andromache of Euripides, Peleus attributes the Looseness of Helena entirely to her being educated at Sparta. It is not in the power of Spartan Ladies, says he, to be modest if they would; they come out of their Parents Houses with Petticoats through which their Limbs are visible. They run and wrestle with the young Men; which I cannot suffer. After this, are you astonish'd that these Women are debauch'd one and all *? This Passage from a Greek

* — Οὐς ἂν, εἰ βούλοιο τις, Εὐφρων γένοιτο Σπαρτιατίδων χορη,
 Αἱ ξὺν νέοισιν ἐξερημῆσαι δόμους,
 Γυμνοῖσι μηροῖς, ἢ πέπλοις ἀνειμένοις,
 Δόμους παλαιστράς τ' ἢ ἀνασχετὸς εἰς,
 Κοινὰς ἔχουσιν κατὰ θαυμάζειν χρεῶν,
 Εἰ μὴ γυναικῶς σωφρονας παιδεύετε.

— Neque, si velit aliqua
 Puella Spartana, possit esse casta:
 Quæ, relinquentes Domos, cum Juvenibus,
 Nudis Femoribus, & Tunicis laxatis,
 Gyrus, & Palestras, non tolerandas mihi,
 Communes habent. Deinde an mirari oportet,
 Si non educatis Mulieres castas?

Euripides, Androm. Ver. 598. p. 519.

Poet,

Poet, which so justly condemns that Debauchery which Lycurgus had establish'd on such false and ridiculous Pretences, is an evident Proof that Probity and Modesty have found Advocates, even amongst Nations whose establish'd Religions were impious, and but too favourable to the Motions of the Passions. Virtue, says a Nazarene Father, *was respected, even where Debauchery bore the sway. May we not with Reason stand amazed, that such as took upon them the care of Mankind, and the prescribing to them Laws, should nevertheless be more deficient, in respect to a Sense of Shame and Good-manners, than private Men?

The Errors of ancient Lawgivers ought to serve as Cautions to such as have, in these Days, the power of altering or rescinding Laws. They should be hindred, by considering of them, from having any Prejudices in favour of such as have been enacted by their Ancestors, so as to doubt of the Expediency of repealing them, whenever they are found either useless or dangerous. Is it not ridiculous to have more respect, either for a Man or for a Custom, because the Man has been dead or the Custom established five hundred Years, than if the Person was now living, or the Custom just instituted? If we were once agreed on this Principle, it would be easy to shew that such as are charged with the Care of superintending the Laws of several Nations, would find enough to point out such as ought to be abrogated, and to distinguish the Good from the Bad.

* Tanta Vis est Probitatis & Castitatis, ut omnis, vel penè omnis, ejus Laude moveatur Humana Natura; nec usque adeo sit Turpitudine viciosa, ut totum amittat Sensum Honestatis. August. de Civit. Dei, Lib. ii. cap. xxvi. p. 255.

Lycurgus had establish'd in Sparta a Senate composed of twenty-eight Persons, who ballanced and kept within bounds the Power of their Monarchs. Aristotle censures the Construction of this Senate, because the Members were for Life. The Mind, says he, grows old as well as the Body; it is unjust to commit the Lives and Fortunes of our Countrymen to such as may become incapable of preserving them.

Plato could by no means approve what Lycurgus had ordain'd, as to throwing into a certain Pool at the Foot of Mount Tagetes such Children as were born ill-shaped, tender, or with any kind of Defect.

Aristotle, on the contrary, praises this unnatural Cruelty, which ought rather to be exercised by wild Beasts than by Men. As to Children, who should be bred up or exposed, that Philosopher says, the Law ought to provide against the bringing up such as are imperfect, or any ways maim'd in their Limbs: and that in such Places as the Laws of the Country would not permit of this, another Expedient, which he mentions, should be practised.

After reading a Proposition so absurd, so cruel, and so apparently repugnant to Humanity, ought we blindly to adopt Laws made by Men, who are held ever so much superiour to the rest of their Species, on account of the strength of their Understandings? Happy, my Friend, is the Nation where the Laws are inviolably adhered to; and where, at the same time, none are received but what are founded in Virtue, Prudence, and Probity! That which, in too many Countries, gives the Judges room to raise themselves above the Laws, to attribute to themselves a kind of despotic Authority, and in criminal Matters especially, to erect a kind of arbitrary Jurisdiction, is the visible Flaw in the written Laws of those Nations. As they have it not in their powers either to alter or abrogate those Laws, they take this Method of explaining them to their fancy; and this, after a hundred different Methods, according as they apprehend a variety of Cases may require. In all these different Explications, they very often mistake the Motions of their Passions for Impressions of Justice; and if at any time, they save thereby some innocent Persons, it is probable, they free as many who are guilty.
not

I return, dear Isaac, to the manner in which the English administer Justice. It is wise, prudent, and worthy the Imitation of all other Nations. Whenever they perceive a Law to be wanting, they enact it; and take care to execute it strictly, till they see cause to abrogate it. If, in process of time, they perceive it to be hurtful, they do not endeavour to elude it by Explications, but repeal it. From an Apprehension of introducing this pernicious Custom, of leaving Judges at liberty to follow their Caprices in matters of Life, or even of the Properties of their Fellow-Citizens, instead of granting an unlimited Authority to Magistrates, the English allow their Kings to be only Protectors of the Laws, and not Tyrants.

Adieu, dear Isaac, live content and happy, and may the God of our Fathers cover thee with Blessings.

London.

L E T T E R CLVI.

AARON MONCECA to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraites, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE strange Humours, dear Isaac, which I have observ'd in the Nations through which I have rambled; those Errors and Prejudices which, generally speaking, blind Mankind, have obliged me to reflect seriously on the bad State of Morality among the Europeans. They are thoroughly persuaded that the Maxims they follow are more conformable to Reason, and the Nature of Things, than are those of the Africans and Asiatics. However, when we nicely examine their Sentiments, especially such as are founded on the Authority of their Divines, we easily discover that they are as wide of Justice and Equity as those of the Cannibals, or any other Savages.

We need not be astonish'd that People do not perceive Errors in which they are grown up, and of which they grow every day more and more persuaded. They cover them with a Veil of Religion and Piety; and thus they render them venerable. They believe that they serve God in digressing from the Rules of Morality. How then should we wonder at such Digressions?

The first Nazarene Doctors, whom they commonly call the Apostles, preach'd a Doctrine so conformable to Equity, and of such high Use to Society,

Society, that their greatest Adversaries acknowledge their moral Précepts to be infinitely superiour to those of the wisest Philosophers among the Ancients. Our Rabbi's themselves readily admit, that if the Nazarenes follow'd exactly the fundamental Principles of their System of Morals, they would be oblig'd to esteem them as Men every way more worthy of Praise than Socrates himself. But unfortunately for them; and still more so for us, they have entirely abandon'd the Sentiments of their first Doctors; and their Morality at this Day, is a kind of political Patchwork, wherein they have endeavour'd to preserve some outward Resemblance of their true and ancient System.

It seems to me, dear Isaac, that Men are born to be the Dupes of all such as pretend to instruct them for their own good, and yet really intend to serve their private Interests thereby: Two hundred Years after these first Nazarene Doctors had open'd the Eyes of their Disciples, and taught them the Rules of exact Equity, a Set of Divines sprung up, who made it their Business to destroy what the others had built up*. Among these there was one O-rigen; a Man of a dark and gloomy Temper, who was for pushing things to Extremity. His Humour carried him so far, as to make him the first Victim of the Whimsicalness of his own Ideas. For in a strong Fit of Enthusiasm, he castrated himself, that he might be able to instruct Women in the Principles of Religion, without running any risque of yielding to Temptations.

Tertullian departed still farther from the Rules of true Morality. He publish'd and maintain'd Opinions which absolutely overturn'd all Rule and

* See the second Part of The Secret Memoirs of the Republick of Letters; in which our Author treats amply of the Fathers of the Church.

Order in States: He pretended that a Nazarene could not in Conscience execute the Office of a Judge, damning all Magistrates without Restriction, and insinuating, that to be an Emperor, and remain a Christian, was impracticable.

These first Errors, so contrary to sound Morality, were quickly increased by new ones, invented and published by other Doctors; each Age produced an Author, who sapped some essential Point of that equitable System which the first Nazarene Doctors had established: For tho' these Writers were Men of Genius, Learning and Merit, they nevertheless gave way to the impetuous Motions of their respective Tempers, and became the first Dupes of their own Passions. In the time when the Arians had the Emperors on their side, Gregory Nazianzen declaimed against all Persecutions; he preached warmly for Toleration, and maintain'd, that only gentle Methods were to be made use of to persuade the Minds of Men. But when on the death of an Emperor, his Successor proved no Favourer of Arianism, the same Gregory wrote a Letter to Nectarius, exhorting him to represent to the Emperor, that Piety and Religion demanded he should not permit the Hereticks to assemble, or shew any kind of regard to the Privileges which had been granted them. So far was this Nazarene Doctor from preaching a Morality as pure as that of the first Founders of this Religion, that his Doctrines fell infinitely below those of the Pagan Philosophers, who all acknowledged, that that Fidelity, which consists in Sincerity, and in maintaining one's Word, is the Foundation of all Justice.*

* Fundamentum est autem Justitiæ Fides; id est. Dictorum Conventorumque Constantia & Veritas. Cicero de Officiis, Libr. I. Cap. VII.

This Gregory was not the only one amongst those which the Nazarenes called the Fathers, who supported Errors directly contrary to right Reason, and dangerous to publick Tranquillity. Austin, a Man truly illustrious, and of a sublime and quick Wit, but vain, hasty, and of an extravagant Temper, wrote at first with moderation and prudence against the Donatists, who were his Adversaries; but at last, the Warmth of his Genius carried him away. From that moment the Philosopher vanished, and the controversial Divine appeared in his true light: He then began to maintain, loudly and openly, that it was necessary to persecute, destroy, and exterminate such as are called Hereticks; and for this Doctrine, he justly deserves the Title of the Patriarch of Persecutors. He even dared to advance, that we are not bound to keep faith with Hereticks, because all things belong to the Faithful by divine Right; and there is nothing unto which Hereticks can have any legal Title. In this manner, this red-hot African established it as a thing certain, that Contracts made by Nazarenes with Men of other Religions, were to continue in force till such time only as they had the power of violating them. How much more pure is the Morality of Cicero? Fraud, says the Roman Philosopher, aggravates, instead of excusing Perjury *.

It was not only in their religious Disputes, that the Fathers, or Nazarene Divines, subverted moral Principles. They sometimes abused certain Passages taken from our sacred Scriptures, in order to authorize their own erroneous Opinions. Ambrose, in explaining the Psalm, wherein David says that he had offended against God alone *, takes occasion from thence to set up a Principle the most absurd, and the most contrary to Humanity. He says expressly, that David did not sin against Uriah, when he caused him to be put in the Fore-front of the Battle, that he might fall; because Kings, being Masters of the Lives and Goods of their Subjects, may take them away when they think fit, without being guilty of any wrong, in respect to Men, on account of these Acts of Cruelty and Caprice † Make this Principle agree, if you can, with the fierce and imperious Behaviour of this very Doctor towards the Emperor Theodosius, which the Nazarenes have however extolled beyond measure, or with those outrageous Injuries, with which, without difficulty, he loaded Magnentius. This was far enough from corresponding with that excessive power, which, in the before-cited Passage, he so liberally bestows on Kings. Can there be any thing more frightful, extravagant, or worthy of Punishment, than to assert, that a Prince, who takes away the Wife of one of his Subjects, and causes afterwards the innocent Husband to be put to death, sins only against God, and does no real Injustice towards him who is the Martyr of his Cruelty? To be sensible of the pernicious Consequences of an Opinion like this, one needs only reflect on the frightful Disorders which it must necessarily draw after it. There is, says the sage La Bruyere||, a certain

* Fraus enim adstringit, non dissolvit, Perjurium, Cicero de Officiis, Libr. III. Cap. XXXII.

* Tibi soli peccavi, & malum coram te feci; &c.
Psalm. L. vers. 6.

† Rex utique erat, nullis Legibus tenebatur, quia liberi sunt Reges à Vinculis Delictorum. Neque enim ullis ad Pœnam vocantur Legibus, tuti Imperii Potestate. Homini ergo non peccavit, cui non tenebatur obnoxius. Sed quamvis tutus Imperio, Devotione tamen ac Fide erat Deo subditus. Ambrosii Apologia Davidis, Cap. X.

|| Caracteres ou Mœurs du Siècle, Tom. I. pag. 479.
Cont.

Commerce, or Exchange of Duties between Sovereigns and Subjects; which are the most difficult to perform, I determine not: This would be to judge, on the one side, of the strict Obligations to Respect, Duty, Fidelity, Obedience, and Dependance; and on the other, the as indispensable Obligation of doing Justice, and acting beneficently, which belong to the Prince. To add to this, that he is absolute Master of the Goods of his Subjects, without regard, without account; I say, to add this, is running into the Notions of a Favourite, who would add any thing.

Behold, my Friend, a Morality quite different from that of Ambrose, which is so much the more surprising, because this slavish Submission was never insisted upon among the Pagans, the most devoted to despotick Government. So far were they from believing, that Kings were at liberty to possess themselves of the Goods of their Subjects unjustly, and to take away their Lives at their Will, that *Herodotus informs us, the Persians, who were so submissive to their Princes, had amongst them a Law, by which their Kings were forbid to put a Man to death for a single Crime. By the same Law, great Lords were forbid to treat their Slaves rigorously for the first Fault. They were directed to consider, whether the Mischiefs they had done were greater than the Services they had render'd them; and in case they were, then it was allowed them to punish the Criminals as they thought fit.

What Difference, dear Isaac, between these wise and prudent Laws, and the Opinions of certain Nazarene Doctors? Is it not in truth amazing, that People, enlightned only by the weak Rays of Reason, and remaining as yet under the dark Cloud of Paganism, should have Ideas notwithstanding of a Morality much more wise and equitable, than that taught by the wise Men and Priests among those who acknowledge the Spirituality and Unity of the Deity ?

* Herodot. Libr. I. pag. 67.

Some amongst these seem to be ignorant of the Laws even of good Manners, and at the same time incapable of being restrained by the most sacred Ties of Society. They have violated the Duties of Friendship ; their Passions and their Prejudices have so blinded them, that they have thought it excusable to accuse and blacken, by the basest Calumnies, those with whom they have lived on the best Terms, and with whom they had no other dispute than what was occasioned by some slight difference as to certain Points of Doctrine. Jerome, a Man of a bold Genius, one who wrote a vehement Style, which, it must be owned, in Purity comes little short of that of Cicero, falls without mercy on his old Friend Ruffinus, because he had embraced the Opinions of Origen. The good terms they had lived in, and the intimate Friendship which had subsisted betwixt them for many Years, could not allay his Fury ; he was forced to give way to his Choler, and let it empty itself in a Libel. Happy had it been for him, if he could have made use of the wise Lessons which a heathen Writer hath given the World on this Subject. I mean, if he had practised the sage Maxims delivered by Cicero in his Tract de amicitia ; he would then, without doubt, instead of decrying Ruffinus, endeavour to convince him by fair means, and by using the most gentle methods.

True Tenderneſs hath no Taſte of Pleaſure, Satisfaction, or of Glory, if thoſe in whom it has an Intereſt, take no part in them*. This delicate Sentiment has been long out of the Heads of Divines, and controversial Writers. There is nothing they do not sacrifice to their Passions, and the moment any one of their Friends ceases to be of their opinion, their regard for him ceases also. Their Friendship is turned into Hate, and they offend alike against the Laws of Equity and the Rules of Decency. They would, if it depended upon them, exterminate, by Fire and Sword, all such as are guilty of the unpardonable Crime of being no longer their Slaves *. Unhappy Effects of the Weakness of those Principles, which make up that false and pernicious Morality that covers with an Appearance of Virtue those Errors which are most contrary to the publick Good, and most destructive of the Peace of civil Society.

* Nec fas eſſe ullâ me Voluptate frui, Decrevi tantisper, dum ille abeſt meus Particeps.

If a true and wholesome Morality be known amongst the Nazarenes, they are indebted for it wholly to Laymen. Grotius and Puffendorf have done more good to Mankind by their Writings, than all the Divines antient and modern. These sage Lawyers have gone up to the Fountain ; they have examined with care the Motives furnished by the Law of Nature. They have supported these by the Authorities of the first Nazarene Legislators, whom I have before recommended, in correcting the Abuses, and destroying the Errors which had been introduced by those Men who were desirous of establishing as Points of Morality, whatever was dictated to them by their Caprice, their Hatred and their Ambition ; they have shewn their Readers the naked Truth, which others had made it their business to conceal. However, notwithstanding the Efforts they have made to become useful to all the World, they have hitherto been able to do but a Part of the Good they proposed. Too many Divines, zealous in supporting their own Errors, and those of their Predecessors, have done all they could ; and are yet using their utmost Endeavours to discredit all Works, which teach a pure, simple, and humane Morality, and which disapprove of all the Violences they would consecrate under the specious Pretext of Religion. *When the admirable Treatise of the Rights of War and of Peace, says Puffendorf, first appeared, the Ecclesiasticks, instead of thanking the Author, rose up against him, one and all, and not only procured it to be put into the Index Expurgatorius, by the Popish Inquisition, at which one needs not be surprized, but also excited several Protestant Divines to write against, and to do their utmost to decry it. The same Practices were repeated on the publishing the Law of Nature and of Nations ; the Jesuits at Vienna procured its Prohibition.

* The Ecclesiasticks have in all Ages found out fine Titles to gild their cruel Persecutions against their Enemies, or rather against those they did not like. "I shall bury in Silence, says a Bishop of the fifth Century, who was persecuted for Nestorianism, the Chains, Confinements, Marks of Infamy, Massacres worthy of Compassion, and of which the Enormity is such, that those who were Eye-witnesses of these Slaughters, scarce believe what they saw. All these Tragedies were acted by Bishops; . . . amongst them Effrontery passes for a mark of Courage, they call their Cruelty, Zeal, and their Fraud is honoured with the Name of Wisdom". Σιωπῶ τὰ δεσμὰ, τὰ δεσμοτήρια, τὰς ζημίας, τὰς ἀτιμίας, τὰς μάστιγας, τὰ τῶν φόνων ἐλέεινα θεάματα, καὶ μετὰ τὴν σείραν αὐτὴν δὲ ὑπερβολὴν ἀσιζήμενα, καὶ ταῦτα δραματίζεται διὰ πολλῶν ἱερέων . . . ἡδρασύτης, ἀνδρεία γενέμιςχι, ἡ ὤμοτης ζήλος ἀνομάσαι, ὁ δόλος σοφία λελογισαι. Etherius Tyrannorum Episcopus, inter Opera Theodoretii, Tom. V. pag. 688 & 689.

* Traité du Droit des Gens, Préface de Barbeyrac, page 22.

Believe me, dear Isaac, that this outrageous Aversion of the Divines towards all such as have attempted to support the Laws of Humanity, and to make known its Duties to their Fellow-Citizens, is the strongest Obstacle to sound Morality; inasmuch that one may safely say, that there is more benefit to be received by reading the Books left us by Pagan Philosophers, than those of certain Doctors, who pass notwithstanding for the great Oracles of Mankind. Hapless are those Nations, who are unacquainted with any other moral System, than such an one as is to be pick'd up out of Books approved by the Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian Inquisitors!

Farewel, dear Isaac, and address thy Prayers to the Supreme Being, that he would be pleased to open the Eyes of all Mankind; for tho' we are Jews, we ought notwithstanding to wish that the Nazarenes knew and practised a more equitable Morality. If the Spaniards and Portuguese would become Disciples of Grotius and Puffendorf, they would not slaughter our Brethren in the iniquitous manner they do. May the God of our Fathers heap Blessings upon thee.

London.

LETTER CLVII.

ISAAC ONIS Caraite, formerly Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
CECA.

YOU are, without question surprized, my dear Monceca, at my Silence, and accuse me, I dare say, of Laziness and Negligence; but you will change change your Opinion, when I tell you, that I have lately made a Voyage to Jerusalem. The Nearness of the holy City of David, the Desire I had of seeing that illustrious Capital of the Kingdom of our Ancestors, the Facility of satisfying my Curiosity, engaged me to lay hold of the Opportunity which offered, of making a Trip in a Vessel bound from Alexandria to Saint John d' Acre.

It is impossible for me to express to you, my dear Monceca, the Agitations of Mind I felt in passing through Palestine. Joy, Grief, Pity, Anger, Respect, Spight; each of these Passions succeeded the other in my Heart, and sometimes rose there all at once. Happy Place! cried I, where the God of Israel was served heretofore with such Splendor as his Worship deserved; have my Eyes the pleasure of beholding thee? But alas! in what state are thy Cities and Palaces, of which thou wert formerly full? I see nothing but Ruins, melancholy Remains, which have escaped the Cruelty, the Rage and Fury of our Enemies. Just and good God, to whom alone belongeth Vengeance, remember thy People!

At these Words, my dear Monceca, my Eyes were filled with Tears; and tho' I disapprove the revengeful Temper of my Brethren, yet a holy Fury at that time seized me, and got the better of all my philosophical Reflections. I prostrated myself upon the Ground, and turning myself towards the Ruins of the Temple, from which I was not distant above fifteen Leagues; I there pour'd forth the Prayer which our Brethren use many times in the Year in their Synagogues.

Look down, O Lord!—Look down on the Evils which our Enemies do unto us. Remember thou the Cruelties of Nebuchadonasar, and those of Titus; and above all, O Lord remember Adrian, the most cruel of all the Destroyers of our Nation, who erected shameful Statues on thy Altar, and defiled thy holy City with Idolatry: Who razed and utterly destroyed nine hundred and four-score Towns, and burnt four hundred and fourscore Synagogues *. My Grief grew still stronger, when I came to Jerusalem, and I felt my Heart pierced with a thousand Wounds, when I look'd upon the Ruins of the Temple. The Turks have built a Mosque upon its outward Court; which is still paved with black and white Marble. In the middle, and where heretofore was the Holy of Holies, there is a Mohammedan Temple, covered with a grand Dome, supported with two Rows of Columns of Marble. In the midst of this Dome there is a large Stone, from which the Turks assure us Mohamed went up into Heaven.

Judge, my dear Monceca, of the Despair of a true Israelite, at the sight of this infamous Edifice, raised on the Foundation of Solomon's Temple. The Grief, which I was unable to shake off, would not allow me to remain long at Jerusalem. Satisfied therefore with kissing the holy Earth, which our Posterity shall one day purify from all the Impieties, and all the Abominations which our Enemies have committed there, I returned to Cairo, carrying with me a Box full of the precious Earth on which the Temple was built. I did this not in Imitation of the Superstition of the Nazarenes, who, because they have an infinite Respect for certain Places at Jerusalem, believe that there is something more in that Earth than in any other; but because I was glad to have it by me as an efficacious Memorial of the Evils our Crimes have brought upon our Country, and that I might thereby be excited to be once more virtuous.

* There is in the Jewish Ritual a Hymn for the ninth Day of the Month Ab, in which we read these Words, Recordare, Domine, qualis fuerit Adrianus, Crudelitatis Consilia amplexus, consuluit Idola se pervertentia, & sustulit combussitque quadringenta & octoginta Synagogas. Tractatus Talmudicus, Giffin dictus, apud Joan. à Lent, de Judæorum Pseudo-Messias, pag. 18.

When I consider, dear Monceca, the Mischiefs our Fathers have suffered, I am inclined to believe that they were guilty of some prodigious Crimes, the Knowledge of which hath not reached us. Nay, I must own to you freely, that were I not most firmly persuaded of the Truth of our Religion, I should, on examining the Ills we have suffered, since the Sects of the Nazarenes commenced, be led to believe the Prophecies were accomplished, and that the God of Israel having abandoned us his People, had made choice of some other.

Without staying to consider the first Destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, I run over in my mind, with Astonishment and Horror, those Evils with which the Jews were overwhelmed by Adrian. After that cruel Emperor had slain Barcokebas, and taken the City of Bitter, the last Resource of Israel, he ordered the Image of a Hog, cut in Marble, to be placed on that Gate of Jerusalem which looks towards Bethlehem. He caused a Theatre, and various Temples to false Gods, to be erected with Stones collected out of the Ruins of the Temple of Solomon, and set up the Statue of Jupiter in the Place of the holy Sanctuary. He forbid the Jews, on pain of death, to enter Jerusalem, and cut off the Ears of a Multitude, whom he caused to be transported into several Countries.

If the Miseries we daily suffer in Spain and Portugal, did not shew us too clearly how far the Malice of Men may extend, one could not give credit to the Cruelties which our Authors assure us were exercised on our Nation by Adrian and his Soldiers. They say, that after the taking of Bitter, the Slaught-ter was so great, and Rivulets of Blood ran with such Force, that they carried before them Stones of four Pounds Weight, and discoloured the Sea at a considerable distance*. They tell us farther, that when the Romans had possessed themselves of this City, they drove all the Scholars into one Place, and there burnt them, with their Books; because at the beginning of the Siege these Youths had made use of their Pen-knives and Steel-pencils, to kill their Enemies†. Thus they made it a capital Crime for Persons to defend themselves when they were attacked. The Loss of Bitter was attended with the entire Dispersion of our Nation. The Ills we endured under Titus were but slight things, compared to what we suffered under Adrian. He caused Numbers of Jews to be sold at Fairs, at the same Price with Horses; and sent Multitudes into Egypt, where they perished with Hunger, Thirst and Fatigue. Is it possible, dear Monceca, that God should expose a People to such Mischiefs, if their Crimes had not merited so rude a Chastisement? I cannot think but I am in the right to say, that our Authors have hid from us the true Causes why the Almighty thus abandoned his People to the Rage of their Enemies. Surely the Jews had committed some great Crimes against the Romans, with which the Deity was justly offended. Under colour of Religion perhaps they had committed Murders, and defiled themselves with the Blood of Innocents. We shall see some cause to credit these Suspicions, if we give credit to the Writings of a Nazarene Father, who lived within two Ages

* Quinimo Sanguis rapiebat secum Petras Magnitudinis quadraginta Modiorum, donec ad quadraginta Milliarum usque in Oceanum fluerit. Lent, pag. 18.

† Ista Pubes principio Hostes Impetum facientes Graphiis suis confodiebat. Cum vero hi prævalerent, Urbemque cepissent, involverunt Puerulos illos cum Libris suis, eosque Igne sic cremarunt. Joan. à Lent, pag. 13.

after Adrian. By him we are informed, that the famous Barcokebas, the Author of the War made by the Jews against the Romans, was a celebrated Impostor, who plunged our Nation into an Abyss of Misery, out of which it has not delivered itself to this day. This Wretch, who called himself the Messiah, made use of a Trick to breathe Fire and Smoke *, which is now common to our Jugglers. By this means he excited the Jews to revolt, and by an Excess of Fanaticism, scarce to be distinguished from Madness, he obliged all the Jews who came to serve in his Army, which became at length to be two hundred thousand strong, to cut off a Finger, as an Instance of their Courage. This Monster, born for the Destruction of his Brethren, seduced almost the whole Nation. They entred into his Views, shook off for a time the Roman Yoke, and, in Extenuation of their Revolt, and of these Murders, set up the most frivolous Pretext that ever was heard of. To this our Authors agree, and, by the Reasons they offer in defence of the Jews taking Arms, justify all the Cruelties of the Romans.

If we believe what is told us in the Talmud, the War against Adrian was occasioned by the putting several Romans to death most cruelly and unjustly. Therein we are told †, that it was a Custom among the Jews, for a Man to plant a Cedar when a Son was born unto him, and a Pine at the Birth of a Daughter; they made use of the Timber of these

Trees

* Ut ille Barcokebas, Auctor Seditiois Judaicæ, Stipulam in Ore succensam, Anhelitu ventilabat, ut flammæ e-vomere videretur. Hieronymi Apologia II. adversus Rufinum.

† In More fuit ut cum nasceretur Infans plantarent Cedrum, cum Infantula Pinum: cumque Nati contraherent Matrimonium, ex iis conficerent Thalamum. Die quâdam transfiliit Filia Cæsaris, & confraëctum est ei Crus Car-penti

Trees for making the nuptial Bed, when those Children came to be established in the World at whose Birth they were planted : The Daughter of the Emperor Adrian passing through Judea, the Vehicle in which she was carried, broke down, and the Romans not knowing the use to which those Trees were destin'd, cut down one of them to repair the Princess's Carriage ; hereupon the Jews rose in an Instant, and murder'd all her Train, for daring to destroy a Tree they held sacred.

There can be nothing more ridiculous, or more false than this Story, since nothing is more certain than that the Emperor Adrian never had a Daughter. But admitting the Story to be true, did not our Ancestors deserve to be severely punished, for revolting on so slight an Occasion ? Was it not a frightful Act of Barbarity to slaughter the Guards of a Princess, for a thing of which they knew not the Consequences ?

Without having recourse to the chimerical Notions of the Talmud, let us, Monceca, freely own, that the Impostor Barcokebas prevailing on the mutinous Disposition of our Ancestors, drew upon them those Ills, by which they were crushed. Instead of thinking of the Mischiefs which fell upon them in the days of Titus, and which ought to have served 'em for Warnings, they irritated the Romans by their Disobedience ; and, by their Cruelties and Murders, offended God, in whom alone they ought to have put their Trust. It ought therefore to be fairly owned, that as never any People in the World suffered as we have done ; so did there never exist penti Cedrum istiusmodi exciderunt, atque eam attulerunt. Insurrexerunt in eos Judæi, atque eos ceciderunt. Relatum est Cæsari rebellare Judæos. Profectus ille in eos iracundus excidit totum Cornu Israelis. Tractatus Talmudico-Babyl. Giffin dictus, folio 57. apud Joh. à Lent de Judæorum Pseudo-Messiiis, pag. 7.

any whose Cruelty, Pride, and Obstinacy, did so much merit to be abandoned by God. And which is still worse for us, most of the Crimes of our Nation have been committed through the Instigation of such as have pretended to defend Religion by committing 'em.

We ought to have our past Misfortunes everlastingly before our Eyes, in order to hinder our becoming Dupes to some new Impostor. Whenever the Messiah shall come to put an end to our Slavery, and to break our Chains in pieces, he will not need to direct us to dip our Hands in Blood. His Power alone will subdue the proudest Hearts, and his Will must suffice to do whatsoever he desires: To him nothing will be impossible; false Prophets and Impostors only found their Doctrine in the Destruction of a Part of Mankind. Is it not madness and folly to maintain, that God will send us a Deliverer, who shall authorize us to commit all sorts of Cruelties? Those who form such an Idea of the Messiah, make little difference between him and a Spanish Inquisitor. Let us, Monceca, reject these idle Notions, and let us be assured, that our Deliverer, instead of lighting up new Disturbances in the World, will spread Peace and Tranquillity over all the Earth.

Farewel, dear Monceca, form no hopes but what are wise and worthy of the Saviour whom we expect.

Cairo,

L E T-

L E T T E R CLVIII.

AARON MONCECA, to ISAAC ONIS,
Caraite, formerly a Rabbi at Constantinople.

THE Nazarenes, dear Isaac, seem to have reason for those Reproaches with which they load most of our Authors. They accuse them of having invented a thousand odious Stories injurious to their Legislator, and to have falsified antient History with equal Ignorance and Malice. It is impossible for us to deny, that the Jewish Writers have given their Adversaries just reason to make these Complaints. For without speaking of the gross Fables which are inserted in the Talmud, on purpose to hurt the Memory of Jesus of Nazareth, whose System of Morality is so pure, that no Israelite Philosopher can forbear admiring it ; what Writings, big with Calumny, have not the Rabbins scatter'd abroad ever since the first Appearance of this Sect ? I do not know, my Friend, whether a certain Book has fallen into your hands, the Author of which lived about four or five hundred Years ago, but who has disguised himself as well as he could, with intent to make his Work appear as if written shortly after the death of the Legislator of the Nazarenes. This Fraud, however, is easily discovered, and may be clearly made out ; so that the Nazarenes, far from fearing its Consequences, have themselves taken the pains to publish them : They have caused it to be printed, accompanied with such learned Notes, as cover with Confusion, not only the Author of this fabulous Tale, but also our whole Nation; fond of Stories prejudicial to the Nazarenes, and incapable of distinguishing Truth from Falshood*. Those who adopt, without Examination, all the Calumnies that are published against our Adversaries, are not aware that in doing this they furnish them with Arms against themselves. Such as make use of their Reason, and who are not blinded with Prejudice, are filled with Indignation, when they see us reasoning on Facts notoriously false, and thenceforward give no sort of credit to the Writings of a Man who blushes not at the advancing a notorious Falshood, of which he is at the time he advances it perfectly convinced. This is the reason that the Truth gains no ground, but is in a manner obscured and buried under the Falsities which accompany it.

There can be nothing so horrid, dear Isaac, as the Impostures inserted in the Work of which I am speaking. When our Rabbies maintain the Legislator of the Nazarenes not to be the Messias, I look upon them as Men acting conformable to the Principles of their Religion; but when they invent the most atrocious Falshoods, I do not see how they are to be excused. It is a Truth of publick Notoriety, that Jesus of Nazareth was born of a Woman, whose Morals were perfectly pure. His Followers say, that this Woman conceived by the Operation of the Holy Spirit. The more moderate Jews content themselves with making him the Son of Joseph and

* The Title of this Work runs thus: ספר תולדות ישוע הנצרי Historia Jeschux Nazareni, à Judæis blasphemè corrupta, ex Manuscripto hæctenus inedito nunc demum edita, ac Versione & Notis (quibus Judæorum Nequitiaè propiùs deteguntur, & Authoris Asserta Inepitiæ ac Impietatis convincuntur,) illustrata, à Joh. Jac. Huldrico Tigurino. Lugduni Batavorum, 1705, in 8vo.

Mary;

Mary; but the Author of this Manuscript hath published, with respect to his Birth, a Fable every way absurd.

According to him*, under the Reign of Herod, a certain Person, whose Name was Papus, the Son of Jeh, married a Woman whose Name was Miriam, * Ecce, Tempore Regni Herodis Profelyti, erat Vir quispian cui Nomen Papus F. Jeh. Huic Uxor erat Nomine Miriam, Filia Kalphus, Soror R. Simeonis Hakalph. Erat autem illa Miriam (celebris illa) antequam in Matrimonium duceretur, Comprix Capillorum muliebrium. Nupta illa erat Papo, juxta Legem Mosis & Israëlis, Formæque Speciositate supra alias eminebat. Oriunda ex Tribu Benjamin. Nec Maritus ejus Papus ei permittebat ex Ædibus egredi in publicum, sed Fores eum in finem clausas habebat: suspicabatur enim lascivos Homines (Formæ præstantiâ illectos) Rem fortè cum illâ habituros. Factum verò est, ut Die uno, quo Jejuniū Expiationum agitabatur, Fenestras ejus transiret improbus ille Joseph Pandira, Nazarenus, qui Formæ etiam Pulchritudine insignis erat. Is, cum animadverteret, Virum in Ædibus tunc nullum esse, elatâ voce inclamat: Miriam, Miriam, quo usque sedebis seclusa? Prospectat illa de Fenestrâ, eique respondet: Joseph, Joseph, liberam me fac, sodes! It ergo Josephus, & adducit secum scalam, Miriam è Fenestrâ descendit, & fugiunt ambo Hierosolymâ Bethlehemam, ipso Expiationis Die Jejuniò, ibique degunt Diebus multis remini cogniti. Concubuit autem Josephus cum Miriam ipsâ Exp. Die, Feria esuriali. Concepit illa, eique parit Anno vertente Jeschuam Nazarenum. Concepit rursus, & peperit Filios Filiasque †.

Hist. Jeschuæ, pag. 4. & 5.

† Filios Filiasque] Secundum Literam Nebulo intelligere petulanter voluit quæ in Evangelio memorantur de Christi Fratribus & Sororibus, Math. XII. 46. XIII. 55, 56, &c. Cum tamen nosse facillè potuisset recutitus, Phrasi Heb. Fratres denotare quosvis propinqua Cognatione conjunctos, &c.

Huldrici Notæ in Hist. Jeschuæ, pag. 10.

the Daughter of Calphus, and Sister of Rabbi Simeon Hakalf. This Miriam was very handsome, and Papus her Husband very jealous. He therefore took care to have her shut up constantly. His Precautions, however, in the end proved fruitless. On a certain Feast-day, when this jealous Man was gone abroad, one Joseph Pandira, a Nazarene, came under the Window of Miriam's Room, and spoke to her thus: Miriam! Miriam! how long will you continue thus imprisoned? To which she answered, looking out of her Window, Joseph! Joseph! deliver me, and I will go with thee. Joseph went and brought a Ladder, and Miriam got out of the Window. They went then together to Bethlehem, and at the end of a Year Miriam bore Jesus, and afterwards many Sons and Daughters.

Can there be any thing more absurd, dear Isaac, than this odious, this infamous Falshood, to which the greatest Part of our own Authors give the lye. This the able Editor of that Book hath made clearly appear in his Notes. He has farther shew'd, that the Jewish Author, in order to give an air of Truth to his Fables, hath taken several things from the Nazarene Scriptures, and disfigured them to make them serve his purpose. For Instance, in the close of the last Passage, the Sons and Daughters are plainly copied from the Brethren and Sisters mentioned in the Gospels, tho' these Terms frequently signify no more than near Relations.

The Hatred of this Jewish Writer is not sufficiently glutted, by defaming the Legislator of the Nazarenes as to his Birth; he therefore proceeds to make him a Parricide, and his Fable on this Subject is more gross, and more ridiculous than the first. He tells us*, that finding himself slighted at Nazareth

* Accidit autem ut Jeschua, his visis, cognitoque surium se esse, ac idcirca Notâ (Calvitii) à Sapientibus de-bonestatum, zareth on account of his Birth, he went home to his Mother, pretending to have the Tooth-ach: He told her, that he had found in his Books an easy Remedy for his Pain, which consisted in holding the Nipple of her Breasts between his Teeth. The Mother no sooner consented, than he told her, he would never let go his hold, until she confessed to him the Truth of his Birth; which when she had done, he was so enraged, that he slew Joseph, and then retired into Galilee.

Is it possible, dear Isaac, that our Brethren the Jews should be so wanting to themselves, as not to stifle a Book filled with such evident Falshoods? Or how is it possible they could avoid seeing that, by suffering it to go abroad in the World, they should justify the Reproaches heap'd upon 'em by the Nazarenes, as on Men void of all regard either for honestatum, abierit Nazaretham, conveneritque Matrem suam, ibique ὀδονταλγίᾳ se graviter affligi simulans, Matri offeruerit, se cum Academicis Studiis incumberet, probatum contra Dentium Dolores Remedium audivisse; illudque hoc esse, si Mater Afflicti Mammæ immittat inter Januam Cardinesque medias, Dentibusque laborans eas exsugat, eum revaliturum. Respondit Mater (indulgentissimè, Malique nihil suspicata) Agedum, Fili mî, ponam ego Mammæ meas inter Cardines medias: tu eas exsuge. Mater itaque Mammarum alteram interponit: sed Jeshua Fore claudens, Mammæ Maternas gravissimè affligit, Matremque ita alloquitur: Non te prius dimitto, quàm mihi edixeris, quàm ratione in Lucem editus ego sim, & quæ Studiis olim tua fuerint. Respondit ergo Mater: Spurius tu es Maritus enim alter etiam mihi est, cui Nomen Papæ Progenitor autem tuus Joseph in Matrimonium me accepit, non accepto a legitimo Marito Divortii Libellum. Omnes itidem Liberi mei reliqui Spurii sunt. Hæc cum percepisset, Jeshua Irâ excandescit, & abiens Patrem Josephum occidit: postea verò in Galilæam Judææ aufugit.

Truth or Decency, when violating either of them will enable them to injure their Adversaries? When a Philosopher reads these Absurdities, and reflects that they are not only approved by the Jews, but maintained by 'em to be incontestible Truths, has he not a right to conclude, that all our Authors in general are Cheats and Deceivers, and that such as give any credit to their Works, are Creatures void of common Sense? Was there ever such a pitiful Tale as that of the Tooth-ach, and all its Consequences? I say nothing of the Death of Joseph, because that is a Fact to which not only all the Nazarene Authors give the lye, but also all the Writings of our ancient Rabbins, who, amidst their most malicious Reproaches, never say a word of this sort.

For my part, I am no longer astonished, Isaac, at the hatred the Nazarenes bear to us Jews. The Excess to which most of our Writers carry their Discourses, seem to me the just Cause thereof; and I am rather amazed, that, considering our Behaviour, they bear with us at all. I readily own one thing, that these ridiculous Tales, odious and infamous as they are, are properly treated by our Adversaries, who effectually revenge the flat Jests our Authors break upon them, by treating their Writings as they do with the utmost Contempt.

Before I finish this Letter, I must take notice of an Attempt made by this Author to ridicule a Miracle of the Nazarene Legislator. He went, says he *, with two of his Disciples to an Inn, and asking

* Venerunt itaque inde in Diversorium. Quærit ibi Jesus ex Hospite: Est-ne tibi unde hi edant? Respondit Hospes: Non mihi suppetit, nisi Anserculus unus affatus. Mittit ergo Jesus Anserem, illique apponit, aiens: Anserculus exiguus nimis est, quàm ut a tribus comedi debeat. Permittam eamus: & ille, qui somniarit Somnium optimum

ing the Host if he had any thing to eat, he answered that he had only a Goose; whereupon turning to his Disciples, he said, This is too little for us all, let us go to our rest, and he that has the best Dream, let him eat it when he awakes. They did so; but in the Night Jehuda arose, and eat the Goose. When Day broke, Peter said, I dreamed I sat on the right hand of the Son of God. I am he, said his Master, and I dreamed thou didst sit at my right hand; mine therefore is the better Dream. But Jehuda said, I dreamed that I eat the Goose. Hereupon they began to look for it; but in vain, Jehuda had really eat it.

A Nurse does not quiet her Child with such simple Stuff as this. Such low, such pitiful Absurdities, were reserved for the last Shifts of the Jews! Have not the Nazarenes all the reason in the world, rather to scorn and despise these mean malicious Efforts of our Spight, than to be angry or in any degree vexed at them? Let us pray to the sovereign Being, dear Isaac, that he would enlighten the Minds of all Israelites, teach them to despise these Fables, and not to attempt to outface Truth, by coining such evident and absurd Rhapsodies of Error and Imposture.

Farewel, dear Isaac, live content and happy.

London.

mum comedet Anserem solus. Decumbunt igitur. Tempestâ verò Nocte surgit Jehuda, & Anserem devorat. Mane itaque illis surgentibus, Petrus ait: Somnio mihi visus fui affidere Solio Filii Dei Schaddai: Jesus ait, Ego sum Filius ille Dei Schaddai, & somniavi te prope me sedere. Ecce ergo me præstantius quid somniasse te. Quare meum erit Anserem comedere. Jehuda tandem aiebat: Ego quidem ipsemet in Somnio comedi Anserem. Quærit ergo Anserem Jesus, sed frustra; Jehuda enim devorabat illum.

Hist. Jeschux, pag. 51.

L E T T E R CLIX.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraites, formerly Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
CECA.

I Am perfectly well acquainted, dear Monceca, with the Book you mentioned in your last Letter. It is one of those pitiful Performances which have sprung from the Rabbies, and is as dishonourable to Judaism, as that wretched Collection of Fables and Visions, the Talmud. By embracing the wise System of the Caraites, I am no longer obliged to pay any regard to these fictitious Writings, dictated by Spleen, and which Passion and Prejudice have consecrated to the Service of Religion, or rather have veiled themselves under the specious Pretence of doing Religion Service.

The Passages you have cited from the pretended History of Jesus of Nazareth, are far from being the most ridiculous things in that Collection. Behold one, which in my Judgment exceeds in Absurdity whatever has been written in that kind *.

Jehuda,

* Jehuda verò clanculum se ad Regem confert, eique nunciat, Jesum cum suis esse in Aedibus Puræ. Mittit ergo Rex juvenes Sacerdotes in Aedes Puræ, qui cum illuc venissent ad Jesum aiunt: Homines nauci non sumus, & in te ac Verba tua credimus. Tantum nobis da, ut coram Facie nostrâ Miracula patres. Patravit itaque Jesus coram iis Mira, per Nomen immensum. Ederunt autem Jesus & Discipuli ejus ipsâ Die Expiationum, Feriâ Esuriali,

Jehuda, says that Author, went to the King privately, and told him that Jesus was arrived. That Prince sent the young Priests to meet him; and they said to Jesus, We are neither Deceivers nor wicked Persons; we give credit to your Discourse. All that we desire is, that you would do before us some Miracle. Jesus yielded to their Request, and by virtue of the all-powerful Name of God, did, in their sight, many Wonders. Now Jesus and his Disciples did not observe the Fasts appointed even on the most solemn Occasions. On the great Day of Expiation they drank Wine mingled with the Waters of Oblivion; and went to steep their Senses in Sleep. But in the Night, Soldiers surrounded the House wherein they were, and bound them. Jesus did all he could to recollect the all-powerful Name, but he could not. The Soldiers then conducted him Esuriali, nec jejunarunt. Biberunt etiam de Vino, quod miscuum erat Aquis Oblivionis, cubitumque postea iuverunt. Circa tempestam verò Noctem, Satellites Regis ad ejus Mandatum Ædis Puræ Corona circumdant. Aperit Pura Januam: ingrediuntur Satellites Conclave Jesu & Affeclarum ejus, eosque Compedibus constringunt. Jesus itaque intendebat Animum in Nomen immensum, sed non valebat illud assequi, omnium enim ejus Connexionum oblitus erat. Tunc dixit Jesus: De me dictum est; Vinum & Mustum, &c. (Hos. iv. 11.) Satellites autem Jesum & Affeclas adducunt in Carcer, dictum Domus Blasphemantis, quia Probris & Blasphemiis affecit Deum. Manè itaque Regi-nunciabatur Jesum & Sequaces ejus captos esse, & Carceri inclusos. Præcepit verò Rex, custodire eos usque ad Festum Tabernaculorum. Veniebat tunc omnis Populus Domini, ad se proficiendum coram Domino in Festo, juxta id quod præceperat Moses. Fuit ergo Rex lapidare Jesu Discipulos extra Hierosolymam, & viderunt omnes Israelitæ, & Lapidibus obruerunt Sequaces Jesu. Universus autem Israel Cantica & Laudes deferebat Deo Israeli, quòd Viros hosce Belial in Manus eorum tradiderit.

Hist. Jeschuæ, pag. 67, 68, & 69.

and

and his Disciples to a certain Prison, called the House of Blasphemy, because they had blasphemed God. In the Morning therefore it was told the King, that Jesus and his Followers were apprehended. The King gave Directions thereupon, that they should be kept close Prisoners until the Feast of Tabernacles, when, as the Law of Moses directs, all the People came to assemble before the Lord. Then the King gave command that Jesus's Disciples should be carried out of Jerusalem, and stoned; which was executed before the Eyes of all Israel, who sang Songs of Joy, and render'd Glory to God, for having enabled them to punish thus these wicked Men.

Without animadverting, dear Monceca, on the numerous Falsities and notorious Blunders in this Passage, which are so easily and effectually destroy'd, not only by the Nazarene, but also by our own Historians, give me leave to mark out an evident Absurdity which every unlearned Reader must discern. If the Disciples of Jesus were stoned about the Feast of Tabernacles, and himself crucified some small time after without ever coming out of Prison, how came the Sect of the Nazarenes to spread, and to become so powerful? Who were they who went to propagate its Doctrines into the most distant Climates? How, being thus destroyed in the Beginning, came it to spring again out of its ashes? The Rabbinical Historian foresaw some of these Difficulties, and endeavoured to provide against them, but in as lame a manner as if he had drank some of his own Waters of Oblivion, which hindered Jesus from recollecting the all-powerful name. Is it not an incontestible method of proving Facts, to ground the Evidence produced in their favour, on poetical Pagan Fictions, and the Dreams of the Cabbalists, the greatest Fools in the whole World? For there, Monceca, amongst these worthy People must we find the Sources of this Water of Oblivion, which never swelled swelled any Streams but those of Lethe, and that boundless Power of the ineffable Name, which indeed has had the Power of turning the heads of innumerable Cabbalists past all recovery.

This Man, whose Writings you contemn so much, ought, in my Opinion, to hold the supreme Rank among worthless Authors, for I think verily none of his Brethren ever came up to what he has written concerning the Establishment of Nazarenism after the Death of Jesús. * “ It came to pass, “ says he, that the Inhabitants of Ai having heard “ that Jesús was crucified, had a sharp Dispute “ with the Israelites. They slew all they could “ meet with, and having murdered upwards of two “ thousand, the Israelites durst no longer go up to “ the Temple on the appointed Feasts. The King “ therefore made war upon the Inhabitants of Ai, “ but he found it impracticable to subdue them. “ There were however, at this time, in the City, a “ great number of seditious Spirits, Lovers of No- “ velties and prone to Insurrections. Some of these “ unquiet

* Factum verò est, cum inaudirent Aitae suspensum esse Jeschu, ut Litem indicerent acerbam Israeli. Quando ergo offenderunt Aitae-Israelitam, eum Neci dederunt; & occisa ita sunt Israelitarum bina millia Virorum. Nec poterant Israelitae adscendere in Festum, propter Viros Ai: Bellum igitur gerebat Rex cum Aitis. Sed eosdem subigere non valebat. Nam ipsis etiam Hierosolymis increfcebat Numerus Hominum improbiſſimorum coram Rege. Quidam autem illorum Hominum Propudia Ai ibant, Mendaciaque Aitis referebant, scilicet triduo postquam suspensus fuisset Jeschu Ignem de Cælo cecidiſſe, Jeschu circumcinxisse, indeque illum e Vestigio revixisse, posteaque in Cælum ascendisse. Fidem vero adhibebant Aitae Verbis Scelestorum illorum, & Jurisjurandi Fide interpositâ, conspirabant se Crimen ulturos in Israelitis, cujus Reatum sibi consciverant Jeschu suspendendo. Jebuda autem cum videret:

“ unquiet People found means to confer with cer“ tain Persons who dwelt in Ai, and told them a “ thousand Fables. They said, that three Days “ after the Death of Jesus, Fire fell from Heaven, “ surrounded his Body, restored him to Life, and “ that he afterwards ascended to Heaven. The “ Inhabitants of Ai giving credit to all that they “ were told, became more and more determined
 “ to revenge on the Israelites the Death of Jesus, “ whom they thought unjustly crucified. Jehuda
 “ knowing the Dispositions of the Citizens of Ai, “ wrote to them to dissuade them in these Terms :
 “ The Peace of God rests not on the impious ; Why
 “ then do the People suffer themselves to be deluded
 “ with Lyes ? Come to Jerusalem, and bury your sup- “ posed Prophet, &c. Hereupon the Inhabitants of “ Ai sent Deputies to Jerusalem, who were shewn
 “ the Body of Jesus where it was interred. These “ Deputies returning to the City, instead of giving videret horrenda Aitas Facinora moliri, ad eos Literas in hunc Sensem dedit. Non est Pax, ait Dominus, Impiis.

Quare conspirant Gentes, & Nationes meditantur Vani-tatem ? Venite, quæso, Hierosolymam, & conspici-Pseudo-Prophetam vestrum. Ecce enim ille est cadaver protritum, Canis mortuus & foetidus, quem deposui ego in Reconditorio Stercorum ! Inutiles ergo illi Homines, cum haec perciperent, Hierosolymam pergunt, ibique vident Jesum depositum in Loco Sordibus & Stercoribus inquinatissimo. Recipientes autem se in Ai, divulgant ibi pura Mendacia esse, quae transcripserit Jehuda. Nam ecce (aiebant) venimus nos Hierosolymam, & plures ibi sunt qui contra Regem insurrexerunt, eumque expule-runt, quod noluerit credere in Jesum : multi quoque Sapientum occisi sunt ob ipsam etiam Infidelitatem in Jesum. Aitae itaque credebant Verbis mendacibus Hominum nauci, Bellumque indicebant Israel.

Hist. Jeschuæ, pag. 95, 96, 97.

“ glory

“ glory to the Truth, affirmed all that was contained in Jehuda's Epistle to be notorious Lyes and Falshoods, as also that Numbers, in Jerusalem itself, were come over to Jesus and had revolted against the King. On this News the People of Ai cut the Throats of many wise Citizens who had been Enemies to Jesus, and continued the War as vigorously as ever against the Israelites.”

Behold, Monceca, a Series of Facts, of which no other Author, Pagan or Christian, ever spake a Word. It is really matter of Surprise, how a Person ever so well trained to lying, could, without blushing, give such a Romance as this to the World as true History. This Rabbi ought at least to have given some appearance of Truth to his Fictions. There never was any thing so ill-contrived, so in-connected, or so contradictory, as to say, that the Disciples of Jesus were stoned, that the Inhabitants of Jerusalem were pleased therewith; that People from Ai came and saw the dead Body of Jesus; and yet that these very People should fight most zealously in his Quarrel. Have not the Nazarenes all the reason in the World to treat our Rabbies as a Crew of Impostors, and to decry Judaism, because built upon their Writings, and consequently resting on a wretched Mass of Lyes, ridiculous Fictions, and groundless Calumnies?

If all our Brethren of the House of Israel were of the same Disposition with the Caraites, they would not stand in fear of any such Reproaches. Our Faith is grounded solely on the sacred Scriptures. Our Oracles alone are infallible, and therefore we are never deceived. In order to defend our Cause against the Christians, we are not obliged to have recourse to Frauds unworthy of an honest Man. They attack us from the Scriptures, and in the same Scriptures we find matter for our Defence. If they could.

could once prove to our Satisfaction the Prophecies to be accomplished, we should readily go over to their Faith. But we do not conceive this possible, that the great Lamp of Israel should as yet have shined amongst us. When he shall appear, his Light shall be visible unto all. It will be to no purpose to shut our Eyes. His Rays will pierce through the thickest Darkness; and therefore we ought not to suppose the Messiah, coming to free all the Jews, should leave the greatest Part of them in Ignorance and Blindness.

This, dear Monceca, is the capital Argument against the Nazarenes. They say the Messiah is come. What good has he done the Jews? For from them, and for them, the Scriptures say he was to come into the World. However, all sorts of Mischiefs have fallen on our Nation. We are all driven from Jerusalem. The Temple of the living God is destroyed. Sacrifices are no longer offered. We are a Prey to the Malice, Hatred, and Cruelty of all Nations. Are these the Blessings promised on the coming of the Messiah? Is this the shining Star which was to illuminate Israel, which was to bring us Prosperity without End? Our Miseries prove but too strongly, that our Redeemer is not come. When he shall truly appear, the Nazarenes themselves will easily know him by the Favours which he will bestow upon us. He shall lead us forth out of Slavery, and our Liberty, our Glory, our good Fortune, shall become such shining Evidences, as to convince even the most obstinate and the most infatuated of our Enemies.

Farewel, dear Monceca, live content and happy, and depend on my giving you, in my next, some farther Remarks on the impertinent Work of this Rabbinical Impostor.

Caire.

L E T T E R C L X.

ISAAC ONIS, Caraite, formerly a Rabbi
at Constantinople, to AARON MON-
 C E C A.

I Promised you, dear Monceca, to write to you once again, on the Head of the Absurdities and Falsities which the Rabbins have inserted in the Life of the Legislator of the Nazarenes. I shall begin with a Passage which follows that I copied in my last, and which the shameless ridiculous Historian continues in these Terms *.

“ The

* Rex ergo & Sapientes perspicientes, Aitas Israelitis superiores evadere, & adangeri etiam Agmen Hominum impiissimorum, (erant hi Fratres & Cognati Jesu,) Consilia invicem ineunt Jehudamque rogant, quid optimum Factu in Re difficili sibi videretur? Respondit Jehuda: Ecce Avunculus Jesu est Simeon Hakkalpasi, qui itidem est Senex venerabilis admodum. Tradite, sultis, ei Nomen Immensum, & ablegate illum Aï, ibi ut patret Miracula, Civibusque edicat, omnia illa se facere על רעת ישו. Aitæ vero opiniabuntur, dicere illum velle בשם ישו, in Nōmine Jesu; cum Explicatio tamen Vocularum על רעת, ambigua sit, atque adeo apta nata ad decipiendos illa Aitas: nam על רעת (quod notare etiam potest ex Mente Jesu, in Nomine Jesu,) Stylo Rabbinico est לשון אונס, Phrasis quæ exprimit Actum, quem coactus quis & invitus ob urgentem Necessitatem suscipit. Viri verò Aitæ credent Verbis Simeonis, Avunculus Jesu cum sit. Oportet autem persuadeat Simeon illis, in Mandatis ei dedisse Jesum edicere iis ne belligerarent cum Israelitis, cum

“ The King and the Wisemen about him, ob“ serving that the Aitans grew every day more “ powerful, and that the Number of Innovators
 “ and impious Persons encreased continually, “ among whom the Relations of Jesus eminently “ distinguish’d themselves, deliberated seriously
 “ what measures it became them to take; inviting “ Jehuda to Council, and intreating him to give “ his Advice freely. To which Jehuda answer’d “ thus: Behold Simeon Hakkalpasi, Uncle to Jesus.
 “ He

cum Jesus ipsemet Vindictam de illis sumturus esset. Approbabat se hoc Consilium Regi & Sapientibus. Accersunt itaque Simeonem, illique Rem totam enarrant. Respondit Simeon: Jurate mihi sanctè, Hæredem me futurum Seculi venturi. Tunc ibo ego lubens, illisque proponam Statuta non bona, atque cessare faciam Bellum ab Israele. Jurant proinde Sapientes & Seniores Simeoni, eique committunt Nominis Immensi Arcanum sacratissimum.

Abiit ergo Simeon, & cum prope jam Ai esset, effinxit Nubeculam aliquam minorem; Tonitribusque & Fulgetris inde emissis, ipse Nubeculæ insedit, Mugituque Tonitru, quo Aitas percelleret, edito, in hæc Verba fari cæpit: Audite, viri Aitæ. Convenite ad Turrim Aiticam, & ibi præscribam vobis Statuta Jeschu. Aitæ, Voce hac auditæ perterrefacti, undique ad Turrim istam concurrunt. Et ecce Simeon fertur supra Nubem. Descendit vero postea de Nube in Turrim; & viri Aitæ se coram eo prosternunt. Dicit autem Simeon: Ego sum Simeon Hakkalph, Avunculus Jeschu. Jesus vero convenit me, meque ad vos amandavit, ut edocerem vos Statuta ejus; nam Jesus Filius Dei est. Ego porro Simeon edocebo vos Legem Jesu, Statuta nova. Edidit vero Simeon in Conspectu eorum Signa & Portenta magna. Aitæ proin Verbis Simeonis Fidem adhibuerunt, eique dixerunt: Faciemus, & obsequemur omni, quod præcepturus es nobis. Simeon ait: Recipite vos in Aedes vestras. Omnes ergo Aitæ Aedes suas repetunt. Simeon autem in Turri Aitica residebat, & conscribebat Statuta illa, prout ei edixerant Rex
 &

“ He is a most venerable old Man. Discover to him
 “ all the Mysteries and all Properties of the All- “ powerful Name. When you have done all this, let “ him go immediately to the Citizens of Ai; let him “ perform before their eyes Signs and Wonders; and “ let him say, These Things I do by the Power of An- “ other. The People of that City will undoubtedly “ believe he does all this by the Power of Jesus; the “ Phrase being exactly calculated to deceive them. For “ these Words, By the Power, or through the Vir-

‡ Sapiētes. Immutabat etiam Alphabetum, aliisque Literas Nominibus insigniebat, ad dandum tacitè Indiciū, omnia quæ præcepturus erat Mendaciā fore. Hoc vero Alphabetum est quod ille cudit: a, be, ce, de, e, ef, cha, i, ke, el, em, en, o, pe, ku, er, es, te, w, icx, etzet, zet. Et hæc Explicatio ejus: אבנא Pater meus est Esaïi, ציד ועיפ Venator, & lassus ille erat: & ecce Filii ejus credunt in Jesum, qui חי נאל vivit ut Deus. Suffocetur Anima illorum; quia Deo אין אם non est
 Mater, Jesus vero habebat Matrem: sed אפיקורס
 חצו ומעקש ומיור Epicureus, Seducor, &c.

Conscripsit insuper in Usū illorum Libros mendacissimos, eosque vocavit עון בריון, Iniquitatem Consumptionis.
 Putaverunt vero illi, eum dicere אבן גריון q. d. Pater, & Filius, & manifestatus Spiritus S. Et conscripsit illis etiam Libros Nomine Discipulorum Jesu, ‡ speciatim Jo-hannis: dixit vero Jesum omnia illa sibi tradidisse. Nec absque Intentione singulari concinnavit Librum Johannis.
 Illi proin putabant Mystēria ea esse, cum tamen omnia illa non sint nisi Vanitas, ‡ Figmentum Cordis: uti quæ (v. g.) scripsit in illo Libro Johannis, cap. xiii. Johannem vidisse Bestiam aliquam, cui fuerunt septem Capita, & decem Cornua, cum decem etiam Coronis; Nomenque Bestiæ est Nomen blasphemix, & Numerum Nominis Bestiæ esse 666. Hic Verborum Sensus est: Bestia hæc est Jeschu Nazarenus: ei sunt septem Capita, tot nimirum Literæ sunt in binis Vocabulis hisce ישו גצרי, &c.

Hist. Jeschuæ, p. 100—115.

“ tue of Another, imply, in the Rabbinical Style, “ acting by constraint, and, as it were, under the “ Direction of Another. Beyond all doubt, the Citi“ zens of Ai will give entire credit to what Simeon,
 “ the Uncle of Jesus, shall say to them; and then he “ must persuade them, that it is the Will of Jesus
 “ they should cease to persecute the Israelites; because “ he would revenge himself in an exemplary manner.
 “ The King, and all the Wisemen who were with “ him, approved the Advice given by Jebuda.
 “ They sent instantly for old Simeon, and declar’d
 “ to him all they had resolv’d upon. Swear to me,
 “ said he, that I shall never suffer Reproach here“ after, on account of what you command me, and I “ shall obey you in all things with Pleasure. I will “ lead your Enemies into criminal Opinions, and will “ engage them to put an end to the War they carry on “ against you. The Wisemen and Elders swore “ then to Simeon, as he had desired, and reveal’d “ unto him the Mysteries of the All-powerful “ Name.

“ He set out immediately; and when he came “ into the Neighbourhood of Ai, he form’d a thick
 “ dark Cloud, whence Lightnings play’d conti“ nually. He placed himself thereupon, and spoke “ thence to the People thus: Hear me, ye Inhabi- “ tants of Ai, call an Assembly at the Foot of the “ Tower, and I will inform you of the Commands of “ Jesus. The Inhabitants, extremely frighted, “ ran together in Crouds. Simeon riding on his “ Cloud, came also unto the same Place, and de“ scended at last on the Tower. The Citizens of “ Ai prostrated themselves at his Feet; and he “ then spake to them after this manner: I am Si“ meon Hakkalph, Uncle to Jesus, who came to me “ lately, and sent me unto you, to inform you of “ his Will; he is the Son of God, and I will teach
 “ you

“ you his Law. Then did he many strange Mi“ racles; inſomuch that the Inhabitants of Ai be“ lieved him, and ſaid, We will obey you in what- “ ever you command, and whatever you direct us,
 “ that will we do. Simeon thereupon ordain’d, that “ they ſhould retire to their Houſes; while he, “ remaining in the Tower, compiled wicked and “ prejudicial Laws, according as he had promiſed
 “ the King and the Elders. He changed likewise
 “ the Alphabet, and gave new Names to the Let“ ters, to ſerve as a ſecret Index, that all he taught “ them was Lyes and Impoſtures. Now the Al“ phabet he invented ran thus: a, be, ce, de, e, “ ef, cha, i, ke, el, em, en, o, p, qu, er, eſs, te,
 “ u, icx, etzet, zet. Of which this is the Expli“ cation: My Father was Eſau the Hunter, and he “ was faint, &c. He compoſed alſo many Books
 “ in the Names of the Diſciples of Jeſus; and par“ ticularly, the Revelations in the Name of John,
 “ &c.

Do you think, dear Monceca, that among the Tales of the Fairies, there is any thing more ridiculous than this Tale of Hakkalpasi? Is it poſſible for Man to deviſe a more monſtrous or more ab-ſurd Story than the extravagant Fiction of the Law, given from an high Tower by a Perſon riding thither on a Cloud. The Oath he exacted of the Elders, that the Fraul he uſed againſt the Dwellers in Ai ſhould not prejudice his Salvation, and their Promiſe thereupon, is it not wounding all Morality to the quick? Where is, I will not ſay the honeſt Man, but where is the Villain, who will dare to maintain, that it is lawful, under colour of ſerving any Religion, to deceive a whole
 People, and perſuade them to commit the greateſt
 Crimes, under colour of obeying the Will of God?

This Rabbinical Historian had Notions no way reconcileable to Equity or right Reason. It seems that he was as much a Cheat as a Lyar; and that he approv'd, in his Heart, any sort of Frauds, which might turn to advantage. Of this, nothing can be a stronger Instance than the following Passage, in his own Words*. “ Rabbi AK, says he, “ went to Nazareth, and informed himself where “ Mezaria, the Wife of Karchat, dwelt. As soon “ as he knew it, he transported himself thither, “ and found Miriam all alone, her Husband being “ gone abroad. Daughter, said he, it is by the special Favour of Heaven, that I have found you alone, your Husband being abroad. I conjure you to tell me truly your Adventures; and if you inform me justly, I promise you everlasting Happiness. Rabbi “ AK, also to satisfy her, gave her his Oath; but

* R. AK igitur Nazaretham it, exque Incolis Urbis inquirat, ubinam habitet Mezaria, Conjugio juncta cum Karchat. Monstrant indigenæ Rabbino Aedes, quas cum adiisset R. AK, non offendit ibi Maritum, sed Uxorem solum; illam itaque ita affatur: Filia mea, singulari Domini Providentiâ effectum est quòd Maritus tuus Domini non sit. Ego itaque te per Dominum Deum Cœlorum adjuro, ut edicas mihi, quæ Studia tua, & sint, & fuerint olim; tibi que (fideliter Gesta narranti) spondeo Seculum futurum. Respondit ei Uxor: Jura, quæso, mihi per Nomen Domini. Jusjurandum confestim præstat R. AK, Ore suo, sed Corde illud nullum facit. Tunc Uxor ita ad eum loquitur: Miriam ego sum, Soror Simeonis Hakkálph, Uxor Papi. Aufugi verò cum Josepho Pandira, & procreavit ille ex me Liberos spurios Bethlehæmæ. Eo autem Tempore, quo Herodes illuc venit nos lapidaturus, in Ægyptum fugimus. Ibi cum ingravesceret Annona, huc revertimur, Nominaque nostra immutamus, ne noscerent nos Homines. Hæc cum audisset R. AK, Vestes laceravit eique ita edixit, &c. Hist. Jeschuæ, p. 24 & 25.

“ it was Lips only swore, and he promised nothing “ in Heart. Then the Woman, to whom he “ spake, answer’d: I am Miriam, Sister to Simeon “ Hakkalph, &c. Rabbi Ak having heard all her
 “ Story, rent his Clothes, &c.”

Behold, dear Monceca, in this Rabbi Ak a most extraordinary Person. He makes no sort of Difficulty of Swearing falsely, and of invoking the Holy Name of God, to give weight to his abominable Lyes. He tears his Clothes, however, at the News told him by Miriam; as if Adultery was a greater Crime than premeditated Perjury. But a Man, like this worthy Writer, seldom examines nicely what he delivers. How should we expect any thing wise or sage from so great a Fool, so meer a Beast as this ignorant Rabbi?

I will conclude this Letter with a comick and most extravagant Adventure of some of the Disciples of Jesus, which this wise Author thus gravely sets down: “ Simeon Hakkalph, says he, went to the “ King, and said, that if he would give him leave
 “ to act as he thought fit, he would presently destroy all the Followers of Jesus, who were in “ the City of Jerusalem. The King answer’d: I “ give you my Consent; go, and the Lord be with you.
 “ Then Simeon went to the Innovators, and said, “ Come, let us go to Ai; there you shall see the Signs and “ Wonders I have done by the Power of Jesus, and “ those which I am yet to perform. Numbers therefore of these impious Persons took the Road to “ Ai, as he directed, and others rode with him in “ a Cloud. But as they went thither, Simeon “ pushed them out of the Cloud, and threw them
 “ on the Ground, where they lay slain. Simeon
 “ returning thereupon to Jerusalem, told the Adventure to the King, which gave him great plea“ sure; and thenceforward Simeon never stirred

 “ from the Court of that Prince * ? ”

I would ask you, dear Monceca, did I wrong, to embrace the prudent Sentiments of the Caraites, and ought I to have rested in a Sect, the principal Doctors whereof espouse such absurd Impertinencies? If one studied to invent a Fable, capable of turning a whole Work into ridicule, could one have succeeded better than this Rabbi? I do not believe, that in all Ariosto, there is a more whimsical Vision than this of carrying Men, whom we would destroy, into the Air in a Cloud, and then breaking their Necks from thence. A Person vested with such Powers, who knew how to open new Roads through the Air, did he stand in need of such an extraordinary Expedient as this, to put such Criminals to death? He might questionless have punish'd them in a common Method, he who had such Gifts, and not have troubled himself to carry Folks along in a Cloud; and then hazard the laming some honest Man, by throwing them down on his Head? Surely, surely, my Friend, none

* Tum Simeon Hakkalp adit Regem, aitque: Domine Rex, concede mihi, & removebo ego nequissimos hos Homines ex Hierosolymis. Respondet Rex Simeon: Vade; Dominus tecum fit. Simeon ergo, clanculum se ad Nebulones conferens, iis ait: Surgite; ascendamus Ai, & ibi videbitis Prodigia, quæ ego edidi על רעה Jesu, quæque insuper facturus ibi sum. Quidam igitur Hominum turpissimorum Ai eunt. Quidam etiam Nubi juxta Simeonem impositi Hierosolymam iniquunt. In Itinere vero contigit ut Simeon Nube veclus decerneret in Terram illos dejicere; & ceciderunt Homines illi nullius Frugi de Nube, ac moriuntur. Simeon vero, Hierosolymam repetens, Regi Negotium enarrat, Rexque de eo gavisus est. Ex eâ vero Die, & postea, non recessit Simeon ex Aulâ Regis usque ad Mortem suam. Hist. Jeschux, p. 125, 126.

but

but a Rabbi would ever have been such a Visionary, as to think of raining Men.

Farewel, live content and happy, and may the great God cover thee with Prosperities, give thee perfect Health, and the Victory over all thy Enemies.

Cairo.

The End of the Fourth Volume;

[Faint, illegible handwritten text]

The first of these is the fact that the Government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of non-interference. This is due to the fact that the Government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of noninterference. This is due to the fact that the Government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of non-interference.

It requires great strength of mind to endure it.

The first of these is the fact that the Government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of non-interference. This has been due to a variety of factors, including the fact that the Government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of non-interference.

of Bodies: no appearance of theoretical ideas that is no more than one no better than a fiction.

the Wagon, the Wagon, the Wagon

An Alphabetical INDEX.

A.

- ABARBANEL, Rabbi, hi. Commentaries on the lesser Prophets, p. 175. Jews forbid to read them, ib. His Character, ib. Grand Funeral for him at Padoua, 176.
- Abraham*, Rabbi, his absurd Doctrine as to Satyrs, 7.
- Actions*, the most important do not sometimes correspond with the Discourse of the Performers, 74.
- Addison* much inferior to Racine, 198. Has improved the Englisch Tragedy, 199. Hurt his Cato by a cold Scene of Love, 203. The principal Character in that Tragedy the finest that ever appeared on the Stage, 204.
- Adrian* the Emperor sack'd 980 Towns, and burned 480 Synagogues in Judea, 288. The Prayer of the Jews against him, 288. His excessive Cruelty at Jerusalem and at Bitter, 290. Causes Jews to be sold like Beasts, 291. Reason of his Hatred towards them, 292.
- Adversity* requires great Strength of Mind to endure it, 196.
- Agamemnon*, the Butcher of his Family, 63.
- Agmon*, the Hermetic Philosopher, 239.
- Agrippa*, procured to Augustus most of his Glory, 221.
- Ai*, Jewish Fables concerning that City and its Inhabitants, 305, &c. 310, &c.
- Ajax*, no better than a Madman, 63.
- Air*, six Foot thereof strikes the Senses no more than one, 3. Full of Bodies, tho' it appear empty, ib. Its Weight observed, 144.
- Akiba*, a very learned Jew, 177, 178, 179. First Compiler of the Deuteroses or Jewish Traditions, 178. His Writings sadly interpolated, 179. Deserves

I N D E X.

- the Title of Authentick, 177. Ill treated by the Christians, ib.
- Alacoque, Mary*, her Life, 181.
- Alchemy*, see Cabala, Cabalists, and Philosopher's Stone.
- Alcoran*, tortured by its Commentators, 187.
- Alexander the Great*, his last Excesses most shameful, 63. His Body deprived of its gold Shrine and put into one of Glass, 76.
- Alexander VII, Pope*, constrained to raise a Pillar to the Glory of Lewis XIV, 217.
- Ambassadors, English*, ill received in Muscovy, 58.
- Amity*, see Friendship.
- Apocalypse*, see Revelations.
- Apostles*, the Unity of the Godhead preached by them to all the World, 21. They sealed their Doctrines with their Blood, ib.
- Arabia*, its Deserts without Water, 4.
- Arc, Joan of*, see Pucelle.
- Argens, Marquis de*, Philosophy of good Sense written by him, cited, 264.
- Arianism*, St. Gregory persuaded an Emperor to persecute People for it, 280.
- Aristotle*, Passages from Mallebranche, Locke and Descartes, against his Philosophy, Preface. Briskly criticized by Mallebranche, 231. Destroyed by the Cartesians, 237. In credit only with the Monks, ib. Look'd on as a Cabalist, 239. Censured the Senate contrived by Lycurgus, but approves his Law for exposing Children, 276. Advises a worse Expedient, ib.
- Arnauld*, persecuted by the Jesuits out of pure Spite, 22.
- Arseleus*, an Hermetic Philosopher, 243.
- Arthur, King*, deemed an Alchemist, 242.
- Assassins*, rarely escape Punishment, 78. Examples, ib. Restrained in Italy by hanging without going to Confession, 171.
- Affonci*, burlesqued Ovid, and thereby rendered himself ridiculous, 228.
- Astrologers*, often banished Rome, always remained, 79.
- Athanasius, St.* wrote the Life of St. Anthony, 8. Reports that Saint's Conversation with a Satyr, ibid.
- Atheists*, believe nothing in Health, and all things when

I N D E X.

- at the Point of Death, 156. Very contemptible Fellows, ib.
- Athenagoras* thought the Satyrs fallen Angels, 7.
- Attraction*, substituted by Newton in the Vortices of Mr. Des Cartes, 147.
- Adventurers*, or foreign Sharpers, many in London, 97. Makes the English diffident of Foreigners, ib.
- Adventures* of two squabbling Authors, 22, 23. Of Mr. and Mrs. Michon, 72, 73. Of a Musician and Metaphysician, 80. Of an Inn-keeper's Son with an English Woman of Quality, 120. Tragical one of a whole English Family, 192. Fatal one of a Frenchman who would needs imitate the English, 193. Of a Spaniard reduced to Want, 196. Of an unlucky Chinese in France, 209, &c. Of the Patriarch and Corregidor at Lisbon, 224.
- Augustin*, St. his excellent Remark on the Beauty of Virtue, 275. Becomes of a mild and discreet Man so violent as to be stiled the Patriarch of Persecutors, 281.
- Augustus*, no honestier in his Youth than a Highwayman, 46. When old fulfilled the Proverb, ib. He would have made a bad Figure but for his Ministers, 221. Visits the Tomb of Alexander the Great, 76.
- Author*, being so, does not lessen a Man's Quality, Pres.
- Authors*, two quarrel and outrage each other, 22, 23. Never commend but with Design, 23.
- Azoth*, the fifth Element of the Cabalists, 242.

B.

- Bacon*, Chancellor, in some measure Predecessor to Des Cartes and Gassendi in the new Philosophy, 150. Foresaw and predicted the Fall of Aristotle, and the Schoolmen, ibid. His Organum Scientiarum cited, ib. His moral Writings fine, but not so agreeable as Montaigne's, 151. Deprived of his Employment, ib.
- Balgus*, an Hermetic Philosopher, 243.
- Balmis*, Abraham de, a most learned Jew, 176. A Physician, Grammarian, and Philosopher, 177. Composes an excellent Work on the Hebrew Tongue, 177. Accused of Pyrrhonism, ib.

I N D E X.

- Banditti* despising Death, the Duke of Vendome terrifies them by hanging them without Confession, 171.
- Barcokebas*, an Impostor who call'd himself the Messiah, 292. Put to death by the Command of Adrian, 290.
- Bartolucci*, owns the Writings of Abarbanel are prohibited, 175.
- Baptism*, Mallebranche's strange Notions concerning Children who die without receiving it, 232, &c.
- Baudricourt*, Robert de, supposed to be the Instructor of the Maid of Orleans, 249, &c.
- Bayle*, an admirable Writer, 151. His Dictionary criticised, and the Criticism despised, 229.
- Beard*, The Moisture of dead Bodies occasions its Growth, 130.
- Benefices*, prevailing things with the Clergy, 47. The Molinists possess all in France, ib.
- Bibliotaphs*, what? 229.
- Biron*, his Jest on Queen Elizabeth, 163.
- Biffêtre*, House of Correction at Paris, 210. The Abbé Fontaines whipp'd there twice a day, ib.
- Bitter*, taken by Adrian, and the miserable Slaughter there, 290, 291. More fatal to the Jews than the Destruction of Jerusalem, ib.
- Bojars* of Muscovy, Grandees and Slaves, 59.
- Bois*, Abbé de, becomes from nothing a Cardinal, 207. A very odious Minister and justly so, ib. Distributes Lettres de Cachet liberally, 210.
- Bonnecorse*, a very poor Writer, 228.
- Bourbon*, Duke de, delivers a poor Chinese out of Prison and sends him home, 211.
- Bourdalone*, Father, his Sermons excellent, 180, 230.
- Bragardine*, kills an Hermit who was an Adept, 240.
- Brantome*, what he says concerning the Death of Don Sebastian King of Portugal, 219.
- Brutality*, some would have it a Consequence of Liberty, 55.
- Bruyere*, his Writings attack'd by Vigneul de Morville and defended by M. Coste, 229.
- Ernet*, Bishop, a poor Imitator of M. De Thou, 152. Charged with Vanity and Malice, but excusable, ib. Converts the witty Earl of Rocheſter, and publishes a Book of it, 155.

INDEX.

Burrbus, served Nero with great Capacity, 222. His Character finely drawn by Racine, 204.

C.

Cabala, some Notions thereof not impossible, 1. Conversation on this Subject, 238.

Cabalists, their Fictions happily applied by Mr. Pope, 154. A learned Discourse on their System, 238. Their Writings exceeding obscure, 239. Reasons assigned for this, ib. Their fifth Element goes under various Names, 242. Keys of their particular Styles, 243. Few obtain the grand Secret, 244. Their Labours, compared to those of Jafon, 244. They are however of some use in discovering useful Secrets, 246.

Cadies, Turkish, make sometimes free with Revelation, 187.

Cairo, many Samaritans settled there, 182.

Calais, the wise Saying of an English Officer on the giving up this Place to the French, 53.

Calvin, how far the English have adopted his Sentiments, 133.

Caraites, the Saducees, held first their Opinions, 41. The only true Jews (in their own Opinion) in the World, 187.

Carcasses are long preserved found in some Places, 226. Strange Instance at Tboulouse, 30.

Carlisle, Earl of, very badly treated in Russia, 58, &c.

Caroline Queen of England, her Praises. 157.

Cartesians, compare, without reason, Mallebranche to Locke, 147. Their Opinion as to the Essence of the Soul argued, 264. Arguments for and against their Opinion on the Essence of Matter, ib.

Catalonia, Miquelets in that Country terrible Villains, 64.

Chatharine, St. a great Directress of the Maid of Orleans, 251, &c.

Catullus a better Poet than Waller, 153.

Cecilia, St. supplies the Place of Minerva, 71.

Certificates cannot give credit to Absurdities, 127, 131.

Cæsar, Julius, no better than an illustrious Robber, 64.

Cæsarius, a superstitious Monk, 181.

Chamillard, an unworthy first Minister, 208.

Change, disagreeable to studious Persons, 61.

Chanmelé, a famous Actress beloved by Racine. 202.

I N D E X.

- Gbarenton, a Prison there for Mad Folks, 210. Miserable Accident of a poor Chinese, ib.
- Charles V perjur'd in regard to Francis I. 65.
- Charles II of England applauded at the beginning of his Reign, and plotted against in the end, 106. His Government exceeding corrupt, 152.
- Charles XII. of Sweden, his Courage tarnished by his Cruelty, 66. His Severity towards Patkul, 67.
- Chatel, John, stabbed Henry IV. of France, 79.
- Cherbury, Lord, cited as to true Deists, 42.
- Chicane, the English much addicted thereto, 103. This may be owing to their Descent from the Normans, 104.
- Chemistry, has procured great Helps to Physic, 246.
- China, Christianity established there by the Jesuits, 29.
- Cicero, cited against the Abuse of Speculations, 82. On Fidelity in Promises, 281. His Treatise of Friendship well wrote, 284.
- Clement of Alexandria, thought the Satyrs were fallen Angels, 7.
- Clement, John, the Assassin, killed by the Guards, 197. His last Words on that manner of Dying, ib.
- Colbert, Lewis XIV. much obliged to him, 222.
- Collegian appears with a stiff fierce Air, 82.
- Comedy, Observations thereon, 225. English, too loose, 226.
- Commentators on the sacred Scriptures not only useless but dangerous, 188. Very often full of Contradictions, 189.
- Commerce, seldom flourishes where there are many of the Nobility, 33. The English and Dutch great Gainers thereby, 33.
- Congreve, the best Writer of English Comedy, 224. Character of this excellent Author, 227. A real Admirer of Moliere, ib.
- Constancy, of a Spaniard who had lost all, 196.
- Contract, between Sovereigns and Subjects, 113.
- Controversial Writers sacrifice all Things to their Pique, 285.
- Convulsionists, incorrigible, 62. Demoniacks, or else Cheats and Impostors, ib.
- Corneille,

INDEX.

- Corneille*, much superior to Shakespear, 168. Would lose less, if his Pieces were play'd in London, than Racine, 203. The last Act of his Rhodogune exactly in the English Taste, ib. Sinks sometimes very low, ib. Instance, ib. His Pompey an admirable Character, 204. He commended Sophocles and Euripedes, ib. Is censured only by bad Criticks, ib.
- Cosmopolite*, an hermetic Philosopher so stiled, 243.
- Cossova*, the Village of, afflicted by Vampires, 124.
- Coste* defends La Bruyere against Vigneul de Morveille; 229. Translates Locke, yet differs from him, 263.
- Coup d'Etat* was once, in plain English, a Pair of Breeches, 2. 6.
- Court of Rome*, always enterprizing on the Rights of others, 16. Caused the Protestants to be banished France, 87. Little favoured by the French, 218.
- Courage*, does not appear in English Suicides, 195.
- Curves*, first accurately examined by Des Cartes, 146.
- Courtiers* ready to embrace any Religion for Gain, 218. More attentive to their own Interests than those of their Masters, 117. Difference between the French and English, 119, 120.
- Crebillon* cited against Parents Severity towards their Children, 34. His Works have been rudely criticized, 228.
- Crimes*, one ought not to be punished by another, 16.
- Crouzas*, his Critick on Bayle's Dictionary little esteemed, 229.
- Cyprian*, St. believed Satyrs to be fallen Angels, 7.

D.

- Damascus*, Samaritans inhabit there, 182.
- Damnation*, some Papists less afraid of it than of not being buried in holy Ground, 172. that of Children explained by Mallebranche, and his Explanation refuted, 232, &c.
- Dancourt*, a middling Writer of French Comedy, 225, not absolutely void of Genius, but careless in Decency, ib.
- Daniel*, Father, a valuable Writer, 152.

Dancers

I N D E X.

- Dancers* on the Ropes have a particular Saint for their Patron, 71, 72.
- David*, Impertinencies of the Rabbies about his Conception, 186.
- Debtors*, insolvent, Seneca cited on the apparent Hardship of the Law against them, 173.
- Deists*, compared to the Sadducees, 41, 42. The true, acknowledge a future State, 42.
- Des Cartes*, the Restorer of Philosophy, 143. cited against Aristotle, Pres. His Writings cleared the Eyesight of the English, 144. Superior to Hobbes, inferior to Newton, ib. The last overturns his Notion of Vortices, 145. His Excellencies and his Errors, 146. Look'd on Animals as mere Machines, 149. His Philosophy loses its Credit every day, 237.
- Deuterofes* originally composed by R. Akiba, 178.
- Dioptricks* rendered a new Science by Descartes, 146.
- Dirrachium*, or Durazzo, a Satire presented there to Sylla, 9.
- Discourses* of Men correspond little with their Actions, 74.
- Divinity*, the wisest of the Ancients had very vague Notions concerning it, 20. We are much clearer than they, 21.
- Dompré*, the Birth-place of the Maid of Orleans, 250.
- Dorset*, Earl of, an excellent English Poet, 156.
- Dryden* has mended the English Tragedy, 199.

E

- Ecclesiasticks*, a bold enterprizing Race of People, 69. compared to Emeticks, ib. The Good worthy Veneration, the bad to be condemned, ib. In Holland they cannot persecute, 86. Great Disturbers of publick Quiet, 134. Those of Lisbon reprimanded and mortified, 217. Have ruined many Princes, 219.
- Edward IV.* of England, an active debonair Prince, 106. deposed, ib.
- Education*, Politeness depends solely thereon, 56, &c.
- Equality*, amongst Men necessary to encourage Trade, 33.

I N D E X.

- Egyptians*, their Tombs described, 71. Make use of votive Tablets, ib. Embalmed their dead, 75. Wrought only for Virtuosi, ib.
- Elixir*, the fifth Element of the Chemists, why so called, 242.
- Elizabeth*, Queen of England, as Head of the Church a She-Pope, 163. Refused the Sovereignty of Holland and Zealand, 164. Ridicules the Mals, ibid.
- Elogia*, Authors hold a vile Commerce in them, 27. Never bestow them but in hopes of having them return'd, ib.
- Embalments*, of the Egyptians, made for our Virtuosi, 75.
- Emeticks*, useful when skilfully applied, but otherwise dangerous, 69. Ecclesiasticks compared to them, ib.
- England*, happy Consequences of the Toleration in that Country, 90. Great Troubles therein occasioned by the Papists, 91. Exceedingly powerful, populous and plentiful, 94. Its Trade very profitable and extensive, 96, &c. Nobility esteemed only according to their Desert, 101. Power and Prerogative of their Kings, 107. Characters of their Men of Quality, 101. They are Lovers of Learning and look on Ignorance as a Reproach, 118. There are amongst them many very learned Men, 142. Its Inhabitants very corrupt under King Charles II. 152. Tyrannically treated by James II. ib. Strange Things happen there from the Preaching of Dr. Sacheverel, 221. The Laws strictly put in Execution there, 271. Justice is there wisely and fairly administred, 277.
- England*, Church of, the Members thereof hate the Papists and Presbyterians, 104, 134. None but of this Communion can enjoy Offices, 133. Some Resemblance between its Government and that of the Popish Church, ib. Character of their Clergy, 134. Great Enemies to wearing a Hat on, 137. Very warm in defence of Ceremonies they own to be indifferant, ib. Their Dress, Tempers, Manners, 138. Compared to the Jesuits, ib. Their Ceremonies as whimsical as the Papists, 159. Their Jest on Pope Joan may be severely severely retorted, 163. This Church the Mean betwixt Papists and Calvinists, 165.

I N D E X.

English Nation, haughty and rude, 55. Of penetrating Judgments, 61. Their Manners full of Inconsistencies, 102. Large, well made, very robust, 94. Far from being so rude as represented, 94. Always prefer themselves and their Customs to those of Foreigners, 95. In which Strangers are even with them, 96.
 Judge rashly of other Nations by a few Sharpers, 97.
 Hate the French excessively, ib. Nature of their Wars with that Nation, ib. Greatness of Soul visible in their Exiles in France, 99. Trade in high esteem with them, 100. Consider their Quality only as they deserve, 101. Generally speaking assuming, 102.
 Pique themselves on their good Sense, ib. Are tender and full of Pity in some respects, in others cruel and bloody, 102. Despise Trifles, and yet are very attentive to Fashions, ib. Litigious and Lovers of Chicane, 103. Very tender of False Witnesses, ib.
 Every Man hath a Religion to himself, 104. Less silly than other Nations, ib. Readily reject foolish old Customs, 105. Not nice in Dress, ib. Mutinous towards their Governors, 106. Limited Authority of their Princes, 107. The Law is properly their Judge, ib. Lovers of Truth, 115. Cultivate the Sciences, 118. Peculiar Privilege of their Nobles, 120. Fancy their learned Men superiour to others, in all Sciences, 141. This Notion examined, 142. Formerly as much in the dark as their Neighbours, 143. Owe their Improvements in Philosophy to the French, ib. Their sceptical Writers fall short of the French, 151. Have no good Historians, 152.
 More addicted to Party than the Jesuits themselves, ib.
 Entertain too good an Opinion of themselves to write well on the Affairs of Foreigners, 153. Have excellent Poets, ib. Succinct Account of the most famous, 153,
 &c. Their Care in improving woollen Manufactures.
 159. Their Customs at Funerals, 160. Have substituted Compliments instead of Prayers for the Dead, but take the Fees, 161. Their Ceremonies on such Occasions gayer, but quite as ridiculous as those of the Papists, ib.

I N D E X.

ib. Description of their Executions, 166. Do not strike a proper Terror, 170. Censure of this Conduct, 171. Their Contempt of Death, 191. Propensity to Suicide, ib. Reflexions thereon, 195. Their Tragic Poets inferior to the French, 198. Their Tragedies Farces, 199. Description of their Genius, 200. Have corrected many of their Errors, 201. Commit frequent Extravagancies, 203. Enjoy an unbounded Liberty, 205. Their Comic Poets more able, but too loose, 224. They are better acquainted with the Rules than the Writers of Tragedy, 226. Spoil what they take from the French by inserting wanton Strokes, ib. Caused the Maid of Orleans to be burnt, 247, &c. Took many steps to oblige her to resume Petticoats, 254. Rigid Observers of their Laws, and strict in doing Justice, 271, 277. *Esdra*s introduced the Hebrew Characters now in use, 183. Essenes, a Jewish Sect more strict in Morals than any other, 44. Believed the Immortality of the Soul, and yet denied the Resurrection of the Body, ib. Professed many Calvinistick Opinions, 43, 44. Etherius, a Nestorian Bishop, persecuted, 285. A fine Passage from his Books, ibid. Euripides highly commended by Corneille and Racine, 228. Censures the scandalous Behaviour of the Spartan Ladies, 274.

F.

Fanatics, their Revolt in France, 64. False Witnesses slightly punished in England, 104. Fayette (Madam de la) her Memoirs of the Court of France, 87, 88. Remarkable Observation in them on James II., 88. Fortitude, a hard Virtue to practise, 196. Remarkable Instance in a Spaniard who was reduced to want, ib. Fleury, Cardinal, his just Commendations, 206. Blamed by some warm, turbulent Spirits, 215. His Master duely sensible of his Services, 222. Follies, each Nation hath its share of them, 104.

Fountains,

I N D E X.

Fontaine, Mr. la, superiour to Waller and Guarini, 153.
converted at the Hour of Death, 155.

Fontaines, Abbé des, confined and whipped twice a day at Biffêtre, 210.

Force, central, the Cause why Bodies weigh in proportion to the Matter they contain, 147. First discovered by Sir I. Newton, ib.

Fouquet, Father, a Jesuit, quarrells with his Brethren in China, 209. Comes into Europe in order to carry his Appeal to Rome, ib. Forced to fly Paris, ib.

France, All Jews banished thence. 11.

French, their Politeness, 55. Civilize the Muscovites, 57. Why so much despised and hated in England, 96, &c. Nature of their Wars with the English and Germans, 98. Too fond of Posts, Offices and Employments, 116. Know not what true Patriotism means, ib. Affect a shining Exterior, 119. Speak better than the English, 201. Gallant by nature, ib. Not much inclined to the Court of Rome, 218. Their Grandeess ready to turn Jews to please their King, ib. Their Address in managing the Maid of Orleans, 247.

French Refugees, their Character, 98. Mean and base Flatterers, 99.

French Language, Moliere preserved it from Corruption by his Precieuses Ridicules, 225.

G.

Garizim, the Hill whence Moses blessed the Israelites (according to the Samaritans) 182. This is not denied by Christ, ib. The Samaritans sacrifice there to this Hour, ib.

Gassendi had the Courage to declare against the Schoolmen, 143. Inferior to Newton but superior to Hobbes, 144. His Labours in combating the Peripateticks, ib.

Gaza, Samaritans reside there, 182.

Gazeus (Angelinus) Jesuit, his Verses cited, 30, 31.

The Compiler of a good many silly Stories, 181.

George, St. is properly the Mars of the Papists, 71.

Gladiators,

I N D E X.

Gladiators, much admired in England, 103.

GOD, all Systems which exclude his Agency and Power are to be rejected, 18, 20. He cannot be either material or coeval with Matter, 21. The Knowledge of his being One owing to the Jews and first Christians, 22. The great Utility of Missions is the propagating this Doctrine, 24. Des Cartes's Proofs, in respect to him, very inconclusive, 146. And believed he could change the Essences of Bodies, ib.

Great, that Title ought to be merited by a Man's being the Author of Good to many, and not Mischief to Thousands, 223. A Title oftner due to Ministers than to Subjects, 221. Madness to bestow it on an Author of Blood and Mischief, 222.

Greatness of Soul, appears in bearing Evils, not in running away from them by Suicide, 196.

Great Work of the Alchemists atchieved with difficulty, 243.

Grandeess, their Character in England, 116. Ready in France to be circumcised at the King's Command, 218.

Greeks extremely polished and civilized, 56. Hung up Votive Tables in their Temples, 71.

Gregory Nazianzen, St. very quiet when his Party was not uppermost, but an Advocate for Persecution when it was, 280.

Grenada (Lewis of) a celebrated Spanish Divine, Pref.

Grotius, cited on the head of sovereign Authority, 110, 111, 113. By no means favourable to Anti-Royalists, 111. His Rights of Peace and War, an excellent Treatise, 286. Put into the Expurgatory Index at Rome, ib. And was no less decried too by Protestant Divines, ib.

Guarini, a celebrated Italian Poet, inferiour to Waller and La Fontaine, 153.

Guignard (John) a Jesuit, advised the Murder of Henry IV. 79.

H.

Hadnagys, Bailiffs in Hungary, 126.

Hebal, the Mountain whence the Curses were produced by Moses, 182. Hebrew,

I N D E X.

- Hebrew*, the Ancient Characters preserved by Samaritans, 183. The modern introduced by *Esdra*s, ibid.
- Heidukes*, a People in Hungary, 124.
- Henry III.* assassinated by Clement, 79, 176. Fell a victim to his Minions, 221.
- Henry IV.* of France prefer'd before all Princes, 62. Commended excessively, 63. Almost ador'd by the Author, 70. His Death strangely revenged, 77. Rather by Providence than human Justice, ibid.
- Henry VII.* Emperor, poison'd by a Dominican in the Host, 79.
- Hereticks*, desperate Consequences of the Popish Maxim that they ought to be exterminated, 85. Those who are esteem'd for such in one Country are held Orthodox in another, 85, 86.
- Hermes*, an Hermetick Philosopher, 243.
- Herod*, to please the Romans had a mix'd Religion of Jewish and Pagan Rites, 45.
- Herodians*, a Sect of their Masters Religion, 46. The Saducees joined them in time, this Sect subsists still in most Courts, ibid.
- Hierarchy*, Romish, still preserved in the Church of England, 133.
- Historians*, English, vain and partial, 152. By no means worthy of Esteem, ibid. The French very much addicted to Passion in their Accounts of the Civil Wars, ibid. Too often relate impertinent Tales, 250.
- Hobbes*, a Friend and Admirer of Gassendi, 144. Inferiour to him, to Spinoza, and to Descartes, ibid. Remarks on some of his Writings, ibid.
- Holland*, its Inhabitants plain honest People, 55. Endowed with good Sense, 60. The Clergy have no power of persecuting there, 86. Happy Consequences of this Toleration, 90.
- Homer*, his Heroes vicious and not over-honest, 63.
- Horace* cited in defence of Raillery, 31.
- Huldric*, (John-James) published in Hebrew with a Latin Translation and Notes, containing an ample Refutation of the Jewish Romance concerning the Life and Actions of J. C. 296. Copious Citations from that Work, 297.
- &c.

INDEX.

I.

- Iberia*, Chevalier of, a kind of Don Quixot in the Cause of Spain. Prof. A miserable Transcriber of the Dictionaries of Moreri and Corneille, ibid. Abundance of Circumstances in regard to his publick and private Character, ibid.
- Idea's* derived to us entirely by our Senses, 148. innate, warmly maintain'd by Des Cartes, ibid. Destroy'd by Locke, ibid.
- Idolaters*, continue such or recant as the Missionaries give them Money, 52.
- Idomeneus*, the Murderer of his own Son, 63.
- Imposts*, a very severe one on the Jews in Germany, 15.
- Indefinite*, a very confused Term introduced by the Cartesians, 146.
- Infamy*, a necessary Attendant on Punishment, 169. Quite mistaken by the English, 167, &c. Seems unjust as to the Relations of Malefactors, but necessary to Society, 173.
- Inquisitors*, dreadful Consequences of their Method of proceeding, 85.
- Inspiration*, it is impiety to suppose any degrees therein, 184. Luther justly reprov'd for his Rashness in Censuring an Apostle, ibid.

J.

- James*, St. the Apostle vindicated against Luther, 184.
- James II.* of England dethroned by his Son-in-law, 65. Weak enough to be govern'd by Priests, 87. Contemned by the French, ibid.
- Jansenists* decry the Jesuit Missions, 30. Compared to the Pharisees among the Jews, 43. Set up for Saints, ibid. Hypocrites and Cheats for the most part, ibid. Would be more tractable if they had their Share of Preferments, 47. Malicious and very enterprizing, 68. Very like the English Presbyterians, 137, 139. Affect to criticise Montaigne, 229.
- Jehuda*, excessive Impertinences of the Jews about him, 303.
- Jerom*, St. of a most intemperate Spirit, 284. His Violence against Raffinus, ibid. Wrote a Pure and Elegant

I N D E X.

- Elegant Latin Style, 284. His strange Tale of St. Anthony and a Satyr, 8.
- Jerusalem*, taken by Pompey, 49. Destroy'd by Titus, 290. The Jews expect its restoration, 54. The Turks have a Mosk where was the Holy of Holies, 289.
- Jesse*, the Father of David, ridiculous Story of his Adultery, 186. A very profligate Practice grafted thereon, 187.
- Jesuits*, abuse excessively Lettres de Cachet, 210. Persecuted Arnauld out of Spite, 22. Their Missionaries not always to blame, 29. Sometimes very unjustly censured, ibid. Prejudiced Lewis XIV. by their Councils, 66. Suffer'd thro' an unaccountable Weakness in the Courts of Princes, 79. Made James II. lose three Kingdoms, 87, 88. Compared to the English Clergy, 141. Signal-Instance of their Tyrannic Disposition, 209. Caused the Ruin of Don Sebastian King of Portugal, 219. Excessively malicious towards the Jansenists, 230. Caused Puffendorff's excellent Book to be prohibited, 286.
- JESUS CHRIST, Forgeries of the Jews concerning his History, 296, &c. Did not deny Mount Garizim to be the Mount of Blessings, 182.
- Jews*, hated by all Nations why? 10. &c. Accused of Cruelties in sacrificing, ibid. Banish'd France, ibid. Extremely Avaricious, 14. Said to want Honesty, 15. Miserably harrassed, ibid. Poor Excuses for Covetousness, ibid. Ought to have spread their Religion, 26. Account of their ancient Sects, 41, &c. Their Preciseness as to the Sabbath prejudicial, 48. In Portugal behave as good Christians, 50. Great Courage of the Jews of old, 51. As numerous now as ever, ibid. Prohibited the reading Aburbaanel's Writings in Italy, 175. Foolish Ceremonies at the Privy, 179. Accused of corrupting the Pentateuch, 182. Cruelly dealt with by Tyrants, 288. Their Prayers against them, ibid. their fanatick Zeal for Barcokebas, 292. Seditious and cruel, and therefore abandon'd by God, 293. Lyes invented by them against the Christian Messiah, 296, &c.
- Joy*, excess thereof occasions sudden Death, 128.

I N D E X.

- Joseph*, a forged History of him by the Jews, 297.
Jovitzo (Stanoska). dies of Vampirism, 125. That Fact examin'd, 128.
Judaism, the apparent Excellency of its Precepts, 26. The opinion that it subsists only as a proof of Christianity, warmly refuted, 174. Grievously injured by the ridiculous Tales of the Rabbies, 180.
Judea, its present miserable Condition, 288.
Judges, necessary for the Publick Safety that they should not decide arbitrarily, 271. Because their Passions would then naturally govern, 272.
Jurieu, Mr. his prophetick Dreams still disturb the heads of some Refugees, 181.
Justice is never exact but where only the Merits of the Cause are considered, 209.
Justin Martyr, believed Satyrs to be fallen Angels, 7.
Juvenal cited as to a persecuting Spirit, 104.

K.

- Kisslova*, a Village in Sclavonia, infested with Vampires, 122.

L.

- Lacedemonians*, had some strange Laws excessively blamed by Euripides, 274. The Construction of its Senate censured by Aristotle, 276. Who notwithstanding approved a Law for murdering weak Children, censured by Plato, ibid.
La Croze cited as to the good Conduct of Missionaries, 28, 29, 30.
Lactantius believed Satyrs fallen Angels, 7.
Lafiteau, Jesuit, Bishop of Sisteron, his scurrilous Book, 68. Publishes as scurrilous a second part, tho' the first censured by the King and suppressed, 69.
Laymen, better Moralists than the Clergy, 285.
Langey, look'd on the Affair of the Maid of Orleans as a Project of the Generals of the French King Charles VII. 249.
Language, French, Moliere did it prodigious service by his Precieuses Ridicules, 225.

Legislators,

I N D E X.

- Legislators*, many even of the most celebrated have run into strange Extravagancies, 272. Of which there are many examples, ibid.
- Lent* (Joannes a) his Treatise de Pseudo-Messias Judæorum, 289. Farther Citations from him, 291.
- Lepidus* the Triumvir, an Absolute Robber on the Highway, 64.
- Leo* of Modena, a very learned Jew and a warm Defender of his Brethren, 15.
- Letters de Cachet* abused by the Jesuits, 210. Are a Curse unknown in England, 206. Terrible under an evil Minister, 207. Person hanged at Paris for Counterfeiting them, 212.
- Letters, Jewish*, where reprinted and translated, Pref.
- Liberty*, civil, is by no means the Parent of Brutality, 56. Necessary in order to right thinking, 142.
- Lisbon*, the Ecclesiasticks mortified there, 216, &c.
- Locke* cited against Aristotle, Pref. Has not his equal in Spain, 142. Much a wiser Man than Mallèbranche, 156. His Sentiments as to the Soul, 148. Destroys the Notion of Innate Ideas, ibid. Criticised by Dr. Stillingfleet, 231. His Answers, 267. His Candour and Penetration placed him at the head of the Metaphysicians, 237. His Notions as to the Soul's continual Thinking attacked, 257. And defended, 264.
- London*, swarms with foreign Sharpers, 97. as also with Pettifoggers and Knights of the Post, 103, 104.
- Lewis IX.* exposes a fine Army to ruin by the persuasions of the Priests, 220.
- Lewis XIV.* gives too much into the Schemes of the Clergy, 66.—Tho' a Papist, persecutes the Pope, 217. Owed much to Turenne, Conde, &c. 222.
- Lewis XV.* justly commended, 68. His Goodness and Clemency, 69. Hath a just Sense of the Merit of Cardinal de Fleury, 222.
- Lewis*, King of Hungary, a Victim to the Priests, 220.
- Louvois*, a great Minister, Lewis XIV. owes much to him, 222.
- Luce*, St. serves the Papists instead of the Goddess Lucina, 71.
- Luther* censur'd for want of Respect to St. James, 184.

I N D E X.

Lycurgus, some of his laws not over-wise, 273. Censured by Euripides, 274. His Senate at Sparta censured by Aristotle, 276. Another Law of his approved by Aristotle, and condemned by Plato, ibid.

M.

- Mahometans* (or Mohammedans) cause Texts from the Koran to be interr'd with them, 70. Hate the Jews more than the Christians, 11. Do not uncover at divine Worship, 137. Their Clergy make free with their Scriptures, 187. Have built at Jerusalem a Mosk over the Holy of Holies, 289.
- Malherbe*, his fine Verses cited on the Tombs of Kings, 76. His Writings scarce inferiour to those of Horace, 77.
- Mallebranche*, rather a Poet than a Philosopher, 147. His System a Romance, 148. Admits innate Ideas, ibid. Could not be convinced of the Existence of Bodies, 149. Censures Aristotle severely, 231. His Censure retorted upon himself, ibid. Attempts to prove the justice of Children's Damnation, 232. His Credit drops daily, 237. Cited against Aristotle, Pref.
- Manasseh Ben Israel*, a very Learned Jew, 176. His Book intitl'd the Conciliator, excellent, ibid.
- Mark Antony*, no better than a Thief, 64.
- Merchants*, most honourable Character at London, 100. Wife and Honourable Persons, 101.
- Margaret*, St. one of the Directors of the Maid of Orleans, 253, &c.
- Marriage*, curious Observations thereon, 32—40.
- Mariana*, a Spanish Jesuit, his History of Spain admirable, Pref. commended by the Learned Conringius, ibid.
- Maria d'Agreda*, her Seraphick Treatise censured, 181.
- Marius*, more a Highwayman than the Miquelets, 63. Reduced so low as to take shelter in a Bog, 195. Gives a noble Instance of true Courage, ibid.
- Mars*, the Papiſts have such a Divinity in St. George, 71.
- Medreiga*, a Village of Hungary, infected by Vampires, 125.
- Melancholy*, dissipated by Musick, 84. Is the grand Cause why the English murder themselves, 195.

I N D E X.

- Mendes, Alphonso*, Jesuit, destroys all the Fruits of his Predecessors in the Mission, 29.
- Menezes*, a Portuguese Missionary, his Cruelty towards the Indians, 28.
- Mentz (Juda)* a Learned Jew Rector of the Academy at Padua, 176.
- Mercury*, the fifth Element of the Chemists, 242.
- Merlin*, an Hermetick Philosopher, 242.
- Messiah*, still hoped for by the Jews who talk in a high strain of him, 54.
- Messiahs*, pretended ones, John a Leut's Treatise concerning them, 292. Barcokebas, an infamous Impostor of this sort, 292.
- Metaphysician*, disputes with a Musician the Dignity of his Profession, 80, &c.
- Michon*, Mr. his whimsical Adventure, 72.
- Microscopes* reveal to us many things which otherwise would have escaped notice, 2.
- Mills*, the Heiduke, dies of Vampirism, 126.
- Milton*. his Poem inferior to Virgil's, but superior to Tasso's, 153. Religion better employ'd therein, ibid. Instance of this, ibid. Had been of all the Sects in England, 90. Was for allowing them all Toleration except Papists, why, 91.
- Minerwa*, the Papists in her stead have St. Cecilia, 71.
- Ministers* of State, ought not to have absolute Power, 207. Sometimes get the better of such as speak against them to Kings, 208. Some Remarks on their Power, ibid. Blamed sometimes without Reason, 214. Two extraordinary Instances in Cardinal Fleury and Sir Robert Walpole, ibid. Many have better deserved the Name of Great than their Masters, 221.
- Miquelets*, most enormous Thieves, 64.
- Mishna*, the Text of the Talmud less ridiculous than any other part, 178.
- Missionaries* highly commended, 24, &c. Their Extravagancies blamed, 28. The German and French, Men of Humanity, ibid. The Spaniards and Portuguese all Persecutors, ibid. Some Jesuits very worthy Persons, 29. Unite, whatever differences are amongst them, in the good Cause of Persecution, 92.
- Missions*,

I N D E X.

Missions, Foreign, commended, 24.

Mode, the English fond of it to a Degree of Folly, 104.

Monks, have frequently assassinated Princes, 78. Suffered in their Courts thro' weakness, ibid. Are not permitted at Versailles, ibid. Lewis XIII trembled if they came near him, ibid. Persuade weak People to be buried in their Habit, 156. Their silly Tales very prejudicial to the Christian Religion, 180.

Moliere, much superior to Wicherley, 224. Beauty and great Utility of his Comedies, 225. His Precieuses Ridicules drove out affected Language among the Ladies, ibid. His Ecole des Femmes cruelly interpolated by Wicherley, 226. Pillaged, disfigured and decry'd by bad English Poets, 227. His most Esteemed Pieces, 228.

Molinists, a fierce unruly sort of People, 68.

Monceca, Aaron, arrives at London, 93.

Montagne cited as to the Danger of advising Princes freely, 117. An agreeable and delicious Sceptick, 151. Attacked by the Jansenists, 229.

Montespan, Madam, taking her from her Husband the greatest stain on Lewis XIV's Character, 65.

Morality, some curious Remarks on its present State, 279, &c.

Muscovites, Brutes and Slaves, 56. Instance thereof in their Treatment of Ambassadors, 58. Rendered more sociable and Polite by Peter I. 57, 59, 60. Behaviour of their young Gentlemen in France, 59. Persecutors and Persecuted, 86.

Musti's make free sometimes with what they call Scriptures, 187. Suppose abundance of things on the Credit of Revelation, 235.

Munster charges the Learned Abraham de Balmis with Pirrhonism, 176.

Muralt cited as to the State of People of Quality in England, 118.

Muses, reduced to Circumstances of extreme Distress, 158.

Musician, maintains a pleasant Dispute on the Dignity of his Profession, 80.

Mysticks among the Christians compared with the Therapeutæ among the Jews, 44.

N.

Naplusia, heretofore Sichem, the Abode of the Samaritans, 182.

Narcissus ruined Nero by his evil Counsels, 222.

Nations, all have their Follies, 104. Those are wisest who have fewest, ibid.

Nazarenes, i. e. Christians, hate the Jews more than the Turks, 11. Their System of Morals admirable, 16. Do Justice to the ancient Jews, 51. Put Images into their Coffins, 70. Ridicule their own Superstitions, and yet continue Slaves to them, 75. Are absolutely under the Power of Monks, 79. Vain and proud even to their Graves, 159. Always disposed to condemn the Jews, 174. Rack and Torture their Scriptures, 187. And pretend Revelation for all things, 235.

Necessity dispenses with abundance of things, 49.

Newton, superiour to Des Cartes and Gassendi, yet if they had not lived before him would not probably have gone so far as they, 146. Admits many things from Dés Cartes, 147. Is at the Head of the new Philosophy, ibid.

Nicæle, his moral Essays excellent, 180.

Nile, the Egyptian Tombs, &c. on its Banks, 71.

Normands, much given to Chicane, 103.

Novelty, those who are struck with it act as if Possessed, 61. An incurable Folly, ibid.

Nouvelles Ecclesiastiques, a French Jansenist's Libel poorly written, 230.

O.

Obstinacy, a Vice in consequence of our acting against Reason, 52.

Ondins, a kind of Water-Spirits in the language of the Cabalists, 2. Not impossible that there may be such, 4. But impracticable to converse with them, 5.

Onis, Isaac, goes to see Jerusalem, 288.

Opera, how the sight of one delights the Mind, 84.

Orthodox, those who are so in one Country are regarded as Hereticks in another, 85.

Ovid, burlesqued by Affouci, 228.

Outreman, a Jesuit, the Compiler of many tedious Tales, 181.

I N D E X.

P.

- Pagans*, the Impiety of their Prayers, 14.
- Palladio*, an admirable Architect, 199.
- Pan*, the Papists have replaced him in St. Anthony, 71.
- Pantaleon*, St. some whimsical Memoirs of his Votaries, 72, &c.
- Papists*, the great blow given them in England, 87. Copy many of their Ceremonies from the Pagan Greeks, 71. have re-edified Paganism by setting up Male and Female Saints instead of Gods and Goddeses, ibid. Scandalous Abuse of this practice, 72. Persecuted where their Religion is dominant, and tolerated among Protestants, 86. Dreadful in England, not as a Sect, but as of Tyrannical Principles, 91. Ready to drop all Disputes to prosecute others, 92. have the Advantage over the English in the Case of Pope Joan, 162, &c. Some less afraid of Damnation than of being buried out of Holy Ground, 172. Bad Judges of the Writings of Protestants, 179.
- Papus*, the silly Legend of him by the Jews, 297.
- Paracelsus*, a famous Cabalist, 1. His Secret for conversing with a Salamander, 5. An impudent Lyar, 7.
- Paris*, Abbé, a Jansenist Saint, 44.
- Parliament of Paris* severe against Rebellion, 16. Watchful as to any Attempts from Rome, ibid.
- Pascal*, bears very hard on the Spanish Divines, 31. Has quite demolished the Jesuits, 32.
- Pasquier*, his History of the Maid of Orleans, 248. Represents her as a Saint, ibid. But is positive she was a Maid, 249. Her use in the French Armies, 250. Her Conferences with Saints, 251. Fondness for a pair of Breeches, 253. Prefers her Life to them, 254. Falls in love again with Breeches, 255. And is burnt, ibid.
- Patkull*, cruelly executed by order of the King of Sweden, 66.
- Paul*, St. a Hermit, converses with a Satyr, 8. His Life written by St. Jerome, ibid.
- Paule*, -Arnold, a Heiduke, crush'd by a Waggon, 124.

I N D E X.

- A most notorious Vampire, and how he became so, 125.
- Pentateuch* is the only Part of the Bible read by the Samaritans, 182. Who charged the Jews with corrupting it, ib.
- Parents*, had too great Powers by the Roman Laws, 34. sometimes hate their Children, ib.
- Peripatetic Philosophy* decry'd by Des Cartes, 143.
- Perault*, a second-rate Writer, 228.
- Persians* esteemed Barbarians, 56. Exceedingly obedient to their Prince, 283. Yet he could not punish any Offender with Death for the first Fault, ib. Obligated to use their Slaves well, ib.
- Petau*, Father, an able and excellent Writer, 1230.
- Petits Maitres*, incorrigible Fools, 60. esteemed in England a kind of Apes, 95. Pretend to much Constancy, and have none at all, 202.
- Petronius*, a fine Passage from his Writings, 13.
- Pharisees*, so called from their separating, 43. Their Visions occasioned the Sadduces, 41. The Rabbies their Descendants, 43. Excessive proud and meer Hypocrites, ib. Have invented Chimæras, and father them on Scripture, ib. Jansenists like them in their Stiffness, ib.
- Philosophers*, the new add to the Errors of the old, 236. Destroy each other's Systems, ib.
- Physicks*, have been improved by the Discoveries of the Chemists, 246.
- Peter I.* civilized the Muscovites, 57. Had great Virtues and as great Vices, 66. Unnaturally cruel to his Son, ib.
- Plants*, their manner of growing explained by the Chemists, 246.
- Planis Campi*, an hermetic Philosopher cited, 239.
- Plato* censures a Law of Lycurgus, 276.
- Pliny* speaks of Satyrs in the Indies, 90.
- Plutarch*, his Account of a Satyr presented to Sylla, 9.
- Poetry*, much encouraged and highly applauded in England, 156.
- Poets*, Tragic, among the English excelled (in this Author's Judgment) by the French, 198. The former write

I N D E X.

- write with Fire and Spirit, but without Judgment, ib.
 The English Comic Poets understand the Rules better, but do not observe Decency, 224.
- Politeness* is every where the Effects of Education, 56.
- Politicks*, in England appear even on the Theatre, 205.
- Pompey* made a good use of the Jews Observance of their Sabbath, 49. Admired the Intrepidity of their Priests,
 51. At the bottom he was no better than an illustrious Robber, 64.
- Pope*, a formidable Rival to the Ancients and Moderns,
 153. His Rape of the Lock commended, 154. A Quotation from thence on Women, ib. A zealous Defender of Homer and Virgil, 228.
- Portuguese*, censured for persecuting the Indians, 28.
 The Heat and Fury of their Missionaries, 29. Their Ecclesiasticks mortified at Lisbon, 217. Look on their Patriarch as a Divinity, ib. Slaves to Priests and Monks, 218.
- Powder* of Projection rarely found by the Chemists, 244.
- Pradon*, a miserable Author, 227, 237.
- Predestination*, a Calvinistical Doctrine held by the Essenes, 44.
- Presbyterians*, in England, hate the Church heartily,
 104, 134. Whimsical Instance of their Zeal, 135.
 Their moody melancholy Air, 138. Compared to the Jansenists, ib. Their Ceremonies less superstitious than those of the Church, 165.
- Priests*, fatal Counsellors to Princes, 220.
- Prideaux*, cited as to the Fortitude of the old Jewish Priests, 51.
- Probity*, esteemed even amongst those who held an impious Religion, 275.
- Prodigies*, that of the Vampires accounted for, 122, &c.
- Protestants*, tolerate Papists, tho' every where persecuted by them, 86. Do not allow any great authority to their Clergy, ib. Bad Judges of the Writings of the Papists, 180.
- Pucelle*, i. e. Maid of Orleans, see Pasquier's Account of her.

INDEX.

Puffendorf, his excellent Treatise of the Law of Nature and Nations, 286. Prohibited by the Intrigues of the Jesuits, ibid.

Punishments, mild among the ancient Persians, 283.

Q.

Quakers, have no Sacraments, 10. Yet are not hated by other Sects, ib.

Quintessence, the fifth Element of the Chemists, 242.

R.

Rabbins, their strange Notions as to Satyrs, 7. Write nothing solid or instructive, 13. Some of their Writings prohibited under severe Penalties, 175. Have injured the Jewish Religion exceedingly by their Impertinences, 180. Strain and torture Scripture exceedingly, 186. Instance thereof, ib. Pretend to justify all their Notions by Revelation, 187.

Rabbiniſts; see Pharisees.

Racine, much superior to Addison, 198. Was really in love with Channelé the Actress, 202. Would not have succeeded in England, 203. His Heroes wonderfully well drawn, 204. A great Admirer of Sophocles and Euripides, 228. His Works attacked by the low Criticks, ib.

Rapin, the Jesuit, severely censured, Pref.

Rasis, an hermetick Philosopher, 240.

Rason, an hermetick Philosopher, 240.

Rebellion, condemned by all Laws human and divine, 16.

Reformed, see Presbyterians.

Religion, how much that of the Sovereign influences his Subjects, 45. There is none but what is divided into Sects, 40. It is unworthy of a Man of Honour to change from temporal Motives, 52. Religious Disputes ought not to disturb the State, 90.

Religions, adopt Puerilities from each other, and perpetuate Superstition, 71. Seldom create Disturbances where they are mutually tolerated, 91. Differences of this sort create strong Antipathies, 98. Juvenal cited

I N D E X.

- cited on Persecution, 104. All suppose particular Revelations, 235. The most impious and immoral have not eradicated the Love of Decency, 275.
- Republic of Letters*, little Sincerity stirring therein, 231.
- Resurrection*, denied by the Saducees, 42. And by the Essenes, 43.
- Revelations*, Remarks on them, 235.
- Riccus*, the Jesuit, a very worthy Man, 29.
- Richard*, an English Hermit, and an Adept in Chemistry, 240.
- Richard*, a Child so called, crucified by the Jews at Paris, 11.
- Richlieu*, Cardinal, the History of Lewis XIII. a Panegyrick on him, 222. Jealous of his Character as an Author, Pref.
- Rigord*, Historiographer to Philip Augustus, vouches the Jews crucifying a Child, 11.
- Rigour*, the surest way of keeping Subjects to their Duty, 69.
- Rocheſter* Earl of, a Wit, 155. Lived like Petronius, died like la Fontaine, ib.
- Rodriguez*, an indifferent Spanish Author, indifferently translated, Pref.
- Romans*, had too great Power over their Children, 34. Were perfectly polite, 55.
- Roscommon*, Earl of, an excellent Poet, 156.

S.

- Sabbath*, the Superſtition of the Jews in keeping it extremely fatal, 48. The Nazarenes far from being ſo ſtrict, 50.
- Sacheverel*, Dr. occasions a great Change in England, 221.
- Sacrifices*, barbarous ones, offer'd by the Jews, 12.
- Saducees*, were at firſt no more than Caraites, 41. By oppoſing the Phariſees in all things they became incredulous and profane, ib. Deny the Reſurrection, Spirits, and the Life after this, ib. The modern Deists are of this Sect, ib.

I N D E X.

- Saint Justina*, hath an elegant Church in Venice, 199.
- Saints*, have succeeded in the room of Heathen Deities, 71.
- Salamanders*, an Account of them, 2.
- Sallust*, an excellent Roman Historian, 152.
- Salomon Ben Virga*, a learned Jew, 176. His History of the Jews excellent, ib.
- Samaritans*, that Sect of the Jews who have digressed least from Scriptures, 182. Account of them and their Opinions, ibid. Charge the Jews with corrupting Scriptures, ibid. Receive only the Pentateuch, 183. Censur'd on that Head, ib.
- Satyr*s, various Opinions concerning them, with Remarks, 7, &c.
- Scandalum Magnatum*, an English, so called, 120.
- Scarron*, burlesqued Virgil, and made himself ridiculous, 227. A sorry Author, Pref.
- Sceptics*, the French more entertaining than the English, 151.
- Schall*, the Jesuit, a very worthy Man, 29, 30.
- Sciences*, cultivated with great care in England, 118.
- Scholasticks*, their Ruin foreseen by Bacon, 151.
- Sebastian*, King of Portugal, ruin'd by following the Councils of the Jesuits, 220.
- Sects*, a general History of them, 40. Those of the Christians only Jewish with new Names, 41. The old ones worn out, 45.
- Seleucus Cybiosactes* took Alexander's Gold Shrine, and gave him a Glass one, 76.
- Seneca*, cited as to the Justice of a Roman Law, 173, 272. Did great Service to Nero, 222.
- Sermon* of a French Presbyterian Parson, 44.
- Shakespeare*, much inferiour to Corneille, 198. Has some very fine Passages, 200. His Irregularities more pleasing than the writing according to the Rules, ib. Introduces a Conversation between Julius Cæsar and the Roman Coblers, 203.
- Sirmond*, the Jesuit, an excellent Author, 230.
- Socinians*, accused of Want, of Candour, in styling their Adversaries Tritheists, 24.
- Socrates*, accused of Pyrrhonism, 39. Supposed to have been an Adept, 239.

Sophocles,

I N D E X.

- Sophocles* highly commended by Corneille and Racine, 226.
- Sovereigns*, their Religion becomes commonly the Religion of their Subjects, 46. Disposed to change it when Interest requires it, 106. Have all their Imperfections, 63. The best sometimes worst treated, 69. Adored in their Life-time, and when dead not suffered to rest in their Graves, 75. Malherbe's fine Thought on that Subject, 76. Providence punishes such as assassinate them, 78. In Christendom this Crime mostly committed by Monks, 79. Rebellion never lawful or eligible, 113, &c. Want Advice most, yet dangerous to advise them, 117. Undone when directed by their Priests, 220. Glorious and happy in right of chusing good Ministers, 222.
- Spectacles*, bloody and brutal, please the English, 103.
- Spectator*, cited against Philosophy, 24. As to conjugal Affection, 36. And on Views in Marriage, 37.
- Speculations*, Cicero, quoted against the Abuse of them, 82.
- Statue of Henry IV. of France*, almost adored by the Author, 69, 70.
- Stillingfleet* criticized Locke, 229. His Answers reported, 267.
- Subjects*, it is never lawful or their Interest to rebel, 133, &c. Ought to have access to their Prince with their Complaints, 208. Suffer for their Rulers Faults, 222.
- Suisse*, plain downright People, 55.
- Superstition*, runs from one Religion to another, 71. The Christians laugh at it, but are its Slaves for all that, 74. An odd Instance of this, 171. A Stranger still, 172.
- Systems*, have all their Difficulties, 17. Such as admit not a Deity ought to be rejected, 18.

T.

- Tablets*, hung up by the Egyptians in their Temples, 71. Originals of those ex voto, hung by the Papists in their Churches, ib.

Tacitus,

I N D E X.

- Tacitus*, his shrewd Observation on Astrologers, 79.
- Tagetus*, a Mountain near Sparta, 275.
- Talmud*, the wiser Jews give no heed to its Impertinences, 179. Instances of these Impertinences, ib. Not all composed by Akiba, 180.
- Tarentula*, Dancing expels its Venom, 84.
- Tasso*, inferior to Milton, 153.
- Tellier* (Maurice le) Archbishop of Rheims, contemns James II. 87, 88.
- Terrasson*, an Enemy to the Ancients, 228.
- Tertullian*, look'd upon Satyrs as fallen Angels, 7. Reversed all Degrees, and damn'd Men for being Magistrates, 279.
- Theatre*, French, a just Picture of that Nation, 201.
- Theatre*, at London, Tragedies pitiful, 199. A just Picture of the Nation, 204. Mix'd with Politicks, 205. Comedies too loose and dangerous, 224.
- Theodosius*, the Emperor, too rudely treated by St. Ambrose, 282.
- Thou*, Monsieur de, an excellent Historian, 152.
- Therapeutæ*, a Jewish Sect, Account of them, 43, 44. Compared to the Myficks, ib.
- Theresa*, St. a Visionary, Pref.
- Titles*, those given to Princes rarely deserved, 223.
- Toleration*, very extensive in Holland, 90. And in England likewise, 91. Produces good Effects in both Countries, ib.
- Tombs*, those of the Egyptians described, 71. Pyramids erected for Kings, 74. Fine Verses of Malherbe on Royal Sepulchres, ib.
- Tories*, their Histories always Satires against the Whigs, 152.
- Toulouse*, wonderful Property of a Vault there, 130.
- Tragedies*, their Fate decided by the Women at London and Paris, 204.
- Tragedy*, English; see Theatre at London.
- Tragedy*, French, carried to Perfection, 198. Superior to the English, ib. Sometimes wanting in Action, and no better than five Acts of Conversation, 201.

Trent,

I N D E X.

- Trente*, the Jews accused of sacrificing a Child there,
 11. The Council there declared Marriage valid, tho' without Consent of Parties, 32.
Treuxoux, Journal de, excessively partial and deservedly despised, 229.
Turb, a Collection of Rabbinical Dreams, 239. The Talmud and Alchoran of the Cabalists, ib.
Turks, rude and brutal, 56.
Turenne, Lewis XIV. obliged to him for his Glory, 222.

U.

- Ulysses*, no better than a cunning Sophister, 63.
Universities, Enemies to Rebellion, 16.

V.

- Vampires*, some extraordinary Stories of them, 122.
 Examined and shewn to be Delusions, 127.
Vanbrugh, a good Writer of English Comedy, 224.
Vapours, Musick a good Remedy for them, 84.
Vanity attends the Nazarenes to the Tomb, 159.
Vega, Lopez de, commended, Pref.
Vendome, Duke de, how he punished Banditti, 171.
Venetians, affable and polite, 56.
Verbieft, Jesuit and Man of Merit, 29, 30.
Versailles, no Monks permitted to come thither, 79.
Virtue, every where lovely, 60.
Vinagre, full of imperceptible Worms, 2.
Vinci, his Opera of Artaxerxes commended, 80.
Virgil, cited on the easy Descent to Hell, 37. His Heroes in the Elysian Shades majestick, 157. Burlesqu'd by Scarron, 228.
Voiture, inferior to Catullus and to Waller, 153.
Voltaire, cited as to the English Taste, 119, 120. His Zaire translated and spoiled, 199. His Judgment on English Poetry, 200. Has felt the Lash of the small Criticks, 228.
Vows, whimsical Account of them, 71, &c.

W.

- Waller*, inferiour to Catullus, and to la Fontaine; but superiour to Voiture and Guarini, 153.
Walpele,

I N D E X.

- Walpole*, Sir Robert, a just Character, 215.
Wycherley, an English Poet, criticized, 264, &c.
Whiggs, partial when they write of Tories, 152.
Whitaker, blames Luther for want of Respect to St. James, 185.
Witquefort, his Account of Muscovite Civility, 57.
William III. his Glory obscured by his Treatment of his Father-in-Law, 65. Well served by French Refugees, 86, &c. Owed his Crown to the Persecution of Protestants, 87. A warm vigilant Prince, 106. Rais'd to the Throne by the People, and conspired against when set thereon, ib.

Z.

- Zocotora*, People of that Island would not hear of a Portuguese Mission, 28.
Zoilus, his numerous Posterity in all Countries, 228.
Zurita, a good Spanish Historian, Pres.

E I N I S.

BOOKS printed for D. BROWNE, at the Black-Swan without Temple-Bar.

- I. LA BELLE ASSEMBLEE, being a curious COLLECTION of some very REMARKABLE Incidents, which happen'd to Persons of the FIRST QUALITY in France; interspersed with entertaining and improving OBSERVATIONS made by them on several Passages in HISTORY, both ancient and modern. Written in French for the Entertainment of the KING, and dedicated to him by MADAM DE GOMEZ; adorned with Copper-plates. The fourth Edition, in four neat Pocket Volumes. Pr. 10 s.
- II. FABLES and DIALOGUES of the DEAD, written in French by the late Archbishop of CAMBRAY, Author of Telemachus, and done into English from the Paris Edition of 1718. then Corrected and Revised, with the Author's own original Manuscript.
The third Edition corrected, 12mo. Pr. 3 s.
- III. The GENTLEMAN'S LIBRARY, containing Rules for Conduct in all Parts of Life. The third Edition, corrected and enlarged. Written by a GENTLEMAN.
Purpureus latè qui spondeat, unus, & alter, Affuitur pannus.——— Hor. 12mo. Pr. 3s. 6d.
- IV. ROMA ILLUSTRATA, or a Description of the most beautiful PIECES of PAINTING, SCULPTURE and ARCHITECTURE, antique and modern, at and near Rome. The second Edition, 12mo. Pr. 2s. 6d.
- V. A TOUR thro' the Island of GREAT-BRITAIN. Divided into CIRCUITS or JOURNEYS, giving a particular and entertaining Account of whatever is curious and worth Observation:

V I Z.

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. A Description of the principal Cities and Towns, their Situation, Government and Commerce. | provement of the Lands, the Trade and Manufactures. |
| 2. The Customs, Manners, Exercises, Diversions and Employment of the People. | 4. The Sea-Ports and Fortifications, the Course of Rivers and the Inland Navigation. |
| 3. The Produce and Improvement of the Lands, | 5. The publick Edifices, Seats and Palaces of the Nobility and Gentry. |
- The second Edition, with large Additions.
In three neat Pocket-Volumes. Pr. 10 s.

BOOKS printed for RICHARD HETT, at the Bible-and-Crown in the Poaltry.

A Complete Collection of the T R A C T S, written by Sir RICHARD COCKS, Bart. late of Dumbleton in the County of Gloucester, viz.

I. A perfect Discovery of the Longitude (Ecclesiastical) Dedicated to the late Earl of PETERBOROUGH.

II. The Church of England secur'd; the Toleration Act enervated; and the Dissenters ruin'd and undone. Dedicated to the late Earl of NOTTINGHAM.

III. Over Shoes over Boots: Being a Second Part of the Church of England secur'd, the Toleration Act enervated, and the Dissenters ruin'd and undone.

IV. A Farewel Sermon: Shewing the Christian Religion was not introduced by Power and Force, nor established by Violence.

V. A Charge given to the Grand Jury of the County of Gloucester, at the Midsummer-Sessions, 1723.

VI. A true and impartial Enquiry into the late bloody Execution at Thorn; or, a Challenge to the Jesuits to answer it; and a certain Rule and safe Method for the Poor and unlearned to examine their Religion by, and to find their Way to Heaven: Also a modest Vindication of some Tenets held by the People commonly called Quakers.

To which is added,

An Answer to some Reflections made by a Roman Catholic on the True and Impartial Enquiry, &c.

N. B. Each of the above Tracts, except the Charge, may be had separate.

(Price Six-pence.)

SELF-Love and Virtue reconciled only by Religion: Or, An Essay to prove, That the only effectual Obligation of Mankind to practise Virtue, depends on the Existence and Will of God. Together with an Occasional Proof of the Necessity of Revelation. Written on occasion of many small Treatises on this Subject appearing of late in the World.

